Money is the greatest lever in society, and he who possesses the power to make it, can move the world as he pleases. The people, therefore, without fully comprehending the details of the system may insist on one thing--viz: that character for prudence and honesty shall be the first qualifications for a bank officer. Let them do this and they strike at the very root of the evil. The thing is easy, if the people be honest themselves. There is now a new plan for a bank before the people. It is full of what financiers call "checks and balances," and it looks very safe and pretty on paper, but is any one simple enough to suppose that it can be put into practice? If so, he is a credulous man, and has failed to profit by the innumerable lessons which have been read for past years.

Remedy for the Agitation of the Abolition Question In Congress.

A member of Congress sends the following o the National Intelligencer, from the Southern Recorder, as a recipe against Abolition agitation in Congress:

" In reference to the outrageous agitation of Congress, (says the Southern Recorder,) upon this matter, we do not believe that the people, as such, North or South, have anything to do do with it. It is the mere work of politicians, to excite and agitate the country for selfish political purposes. And the agitators deserve, as they receive, the execration of all good citizens throughout the Union. We believe there is but one way to stop this nuisance. Let the press. at Washington, and the letter writers from thence, cease to report whatever takes place on the matter, and let the agitators have it all to themselves. The people do not want to hear it, we know; and if this course were pursued, we feel assured that the evil would cease. Let the press cease to give notoriety to the bear-fighting in the Representative Hall ; let it omit to notice at all any debates in Congress on the subject; let it refuse its circulation to these brawlers, and the whole rabble will settle down in a short time, and the subject become as stale as uncorked
