He expects also to be provided with competent and constant assistants, and hopes, by unremitting attention to his Pupils, to merit the patronage of the friends of Education. As it is the design to make the School permanent, every exertion will be used to render it such, both in the English and Classical Departments, as the wants of the surrounding community command. In preparing youth for College, it will be the aim to make thorough and accurate scholars; while in the English department, a greater attention will be paid to the elementary branches than has been common in Schools of this description.

Emigration to Liberia. The plan proposed in the last number of the Repository, for the emigration of an independent company to Liberia, is a most happy one. If the friends of Colonization would take the pains to present the subject to free colored men of intelligence, enterprise and means, there is little doubt that a large number would engage in such an enterprise.

Men of this description have many inducements to remove to a country where they may be free indeed, in every sense of the word; where they may make and administer their own laws, and be their own governors, beyond the reach of that prejudice of education which must ever attach to them in this country.

To those who have means to commence with in Liberia, the inducements are adequate to the greatest enterprise; for, while the poorest are enabled to assume a position which they could never attain in this country, those with a little property can soon make themselves independent. Those who have children will find the means to educate them in the schools already established. Mechanics will find ample employment for their labor, and the soil, yielding three crops a year, will ensure a competence; and a sure reward to those who cultivate it; while the numerous vessels touching at the ports of Liberia for supplies, will always furnish a ready market for all surplus produce, giving in return, money or the necessities of life. Men going out with means will be aided in making investments in such articles as are required, and that will yield a profit.

The disposition to emigrate, now spreading among the free colored people of the United States, promises a speedy settlement of the country; and it is only necessary to point to the results of emigration from our eastern to the western states, to show how much may be effected in a few years by emigrating to Liberia.

Great privations and exertions are to be endured in the first settlement of any country. A ready example is found in the western country, which now contains its thronging millions of happy, intelligent and wealthy citizens. The more recent settlers listen with incredulity to the stories of fifteen years ago, "told, and enlarged at every telling," of the sickness, sufferings and privations of the "first settlers of the West." Those whose hardships were formerly commiserated by their "eastern friends," are now surrounded by wealth and luxury, the result of their own industry. So it will be with Liberia. Terrible accounts have been circulated of "sickness and famine;" but the time will come when the emigrants to that country will look back with pity and amazement upon the idle fears, and want of enterprise, in those who remain to be servants of servants, instead of emigrating at once to a country where they may take a position among the nations of the earth, and, forming their own institutions and Government, show to the world that their race is capable of appreciating and enjoying civil liberty and its blessings—a country where a field is open for emulation in literature, the arts and sciences, and where the social virtues and pleasures may be inculcated and handed down to posterity.

It has been often urged that the colored man is incapable of self-government. This may be true of the mass; but there are some very capable men in the country, and on them devolves the responsibility of giving a proper turn to the views of the many. The present proposition affords an opportunity, for such as are capable, of collecting their brethren together, or superintending their emigration and settlement in a future, permanent and free home, and when settled, of being their advisers in the Colony, and representatives in their legislature. It cannot be expected that any one now, however intelligent, can take his whole people from the country at once—but there are a great many individuals who can collect around them a hundred or more to form a township or colony in Liberia; and if they neglect to do so, when such inducements are presented as the present, they must content to remain under the charges heaped upon them of imbecility and want of enterprise.

Individuals, families, or societies of any number, can always obtain information as to emigration, and can be attached to colonies or societies already formed, and emigrate with them, by applying by letter to the Colonization Society. Letters must be
