Political. Governor Polk's Message.

We have received the message of Governor Polk to the Legislature of Tennessec .t gives a copious and business like account of the local affairs and interests of that State, and avoids, in an exemplary manner, the subject of party politics. We do not propose to remark upon the matters of merely local interests in the message at length, and only observe, in passing, what must be gratifying to all, that the State is in what may be called an easy, comfortable, and prosperous condition. And having said thus much, it is unnecessary to add that she has avoided the fatal rock of extravagant borrowing, upon which so many of her sisters have dashed themselves with disastrous effect. Not having been tempted to embark rashly in the delusive schemes of internal improvement with which that she is free alike from the danger of dishonor and the necessity of taxation. But Tennessee is in the district of suspended and dishonored banks; and this is a subject which concerns the whole country, and no part of it more than our great commercial emporium. All look with anxiety for the time to arrive when this dark and inauspicious cloud shall be removed. The movements of the people and the language of the public authorities upon the subject, are daily acquiring more and more interest. The remarks of Gov. Polk in reference to it, are forcible, and illustrate, both in facts and arguments, the positions presented by us a few days since, that the banks have no disposition to resume—that their present state of dishonor is profitable to them, though burdensome to the public-and that they will not resume un-almost the whole country at one time ran crazy, she has kept her debt at a trifling amount, and perfectly within her control, so til compelled to do so. Gov. Polk states that at the last session of the Legislature, which was two years ago, the banks reported that they were solvent, that they would be prepared at an early day to meet all their liabilities, and that their suspension would only be temporary. Consequently no legislative action took place in regard to them. What was the result? Every bank, except a branch of the Railroad Bank at Knoxville, has continued up to this hour in a state of suspension .- Some of them have actually had the audacity, while thus refusing to pay their debts, to extend their business, and declare dividends of profits among their stockholders. "This," says the Governor, "is so manifestly improper, that I am conto your notice. Principles of common justo the community before they divide profits among their owners."

He urges the passage of laws to compel a resumption, and also to place such restrictions
