and desultory sketch of the Federal Whig Convention which assembled in this place on the change of Billingsgate against it was a tolerably respectable body, composed cerity of the Convention in its professions of chiefly of Federal Lawyers in attendance on the Supreme Court-of young pigeons, to whom wings have just been alloited, that they may flit about the bars of their respective counties-and of village politicians. There were very few farmers, and these were chiefly from the county of Wake and the adjacent counties of Orange and Granville.

The Convention organized by he appoint- consoling to true whigs, (one of whom he

Common School celebrity, as President, and Major Husted-alias the "Little Blower" and the " Bobadil " of the Observer, Secretaries. Upon taking the Chair, the Doctor addressed the convention. He said whigh bodies were in every respect more polite and decent than those of their political adversaries; that he would show the difference in a clear light, by the genteel and dignified deportment he hemself would evince, and which he said was perfectly patural to him; that he would never "condescend to the application of coarse and vulgar epithets"; that since the "rogues and swindlers"-more numerous under democratic rule-had been driven out of office, the whig party had not needed such weapons. Upon the Tariff the Doctor faltered, and to a person who had just entered, he might have had the appearance of an impediment in his speech. At this moment M. Richard Hines advanced to the Clerk's Desk; but whether he gave the Doctor the cue or not, your correspondent cannot assert. Still, it may be presumed, from his extensive information on the subject, that he did-certain it is, the Doctor lost his embarrassment. and avowed, amid vociferous cheering, that the whigs were for a revenue tariff with incidental protection. What the Doctor considered a revenue tariff, or incidental protection, he did not "condescend" to inform the convention. The next question in order was that of Oregon. Upon this question the Doctor knew his sentiments and those of the "Great Whig Party" decidedly well. (Much sensation, no little confusion, and some anxiety.) The Doctor did not know exactly about the title-it was pretty considerably mystified. He thought we ought to negotiate, especially as we had been doing so for a number of years. True, we had made the last offer of compromise, but in the face of British influence and British power, it became us to WARD negotiate. Negotiation was the word; but still he felt quite certain the whigs thought as follows: That if England could not be connegotiate. Negotiation was the word; but of Fayetteville and the public | ciliated, and if the democrate, in maintaingenerally, that he has taken ing the rights and honor of the country, placthe stand recently occupied ed them in such a position that they could

Winslow, a Committee manufacture and keep con- of one from each Congressional District was Persons wishing to purchase would o well to and Mr Winslow, the mover of the Committee, left out. This is the second time Mr Winslow has had to succomb to Mr Miller's elevation over his own head; and he may well say, "the Raleigh influence is too great and ought to be resisted." Before the Committoo wore early to report, see stand ticipating, perhaps, some difficulty in their action, assumed to thoust Mr Graham upon the convention by nominating him himself. It was met without an expression of applause or a murmur of disapprobation. Mr Francis then retired for a moment to the Committeeroom, and returning, brushed the fresh dew from off his lip, and backed his nomination with a speech. He is a great man -- that Francis; and if he keeps on as he is going, is destined to fill a large space in the earth,

> A solitary voice called out Waddell! but as if ashamed of itself, drew back, and called no more. Mr Waddell pricked up his earsbut made no further response. Mr Francis, accompanied by Mr Hines and Mr Badger, retired again to the Committee-room, and having imbibed additional spirit, mustered courage to move that Mr Waddell make a speech. Permission was granted to Mr W. with vehement unanimity-nay, it was even desired by some that he should speak. At length he came forward and declared that he had not a thought nor an idea in his brain; that he should disgrace himself and disgost the convention if he were to attempt a speechin which the convention unanimously acquiesced, and he was accordingly excused.

Mr Stanly was called for. To do him justice, in both his speeches he evinced considerable improvement in style and manner. His tours through Nash and Edgecomb have been of service to him. They have smoothed him down and given him quite a polish. He expressed himself as ashamed of his past conduct-as having heartily repented of it-as having determined to deal no more in slang and vituperation. He said he had some respect for the Democrats-indeed he believed there " were a good many of them who would not steel a sheep under any circumstances." He thought Mr Graham ought to be re-elected, because he had done as well as could be expected; and he wound up with that very This body adjourned sine die on the 13th rare and almost original extract "Rise! felinstant, having been in session two days. low-men! our country yet remains." The Mr Editor: I propose to give you a short generous warmth of his resentment against the democrats, is a fair specimen of the sinintended respect. Mr Long was then called for but failed to appear. Mr Kerr responded to a call upon him with unaffected reluctance. He had never felt so down in the mouth, or so little like making a speech. He thought it was good for the whigs to have been defeated, and he felt humbled and subdued under the rod. Nevertheless it was
