From the Columbia Telegraph. CHLOROFORM. Its successful use in sick headache—Pleurisy and Cholera Morbus.

The skilful and experienced gentleman furnishing the following interesting facts, writes: "I have met with no remedial agent that has pleased me as much as this, so far as I have used it."

In seven trials made with it in sick headache, it has given prompt relief. When the stomach is much deranged, it will sicken; and in one instance, produced vomiting, the case was afterwards promptly and perfectly relieved.

In a case of Pleurodynia, or that painful affection of the membranous lining of the chest, stimulating Pleurisy, but in which the actions of the blood-vessels are not so high, it was used with singular advantage.

The case was a negro woman about twenty-four years, who had just recovered from an attack of Typhoid Pneumonia, and was very feeble. She had, by exposure, incurred a severe cough and intense pain in the left side. The pulse was small and irritable—the lancet was inadmissible, and the usual remedies ineffectual.

There was fever and sleepless nights. This state of things went on for three days, when the Chloroform was resorted to. It checked the cough and pain immediately. She became speechless and unable to move her hands, but had her senses perfectly. It was apparent that it would relieve her. The pulse improved—became fuller and softer—the extremities warm and pleasant.

She was, however, much terrified at her situation, and broke out into a perspiration, whether from the effect of Chloroform or terror, could not be told. She remained free from pain and cough for five hours. By that time the blister had drawn; an anodyne and sudorific was then administered, which now acted very kindly, and she began to recover immediately.

In a case of Cholera Morbus of 12 hours duration, accompanied with intense pain in the left side of the abdomen, in which the usual dose of Opium did not act, the Chloroform was administered, and relieved the pain immediately. The patient, (a lady,) was set asleep; in about an hour, she roused up and the pain returned. In about one hour after that, she suffered intensely—a full dose of the Chloroform was administered; the pain ceased, she went to sleep, and slept for four hours, awoke without pain—again went to sleep and continued the whole night. On the next day feeling a little headache from indigestion, a few drops of the Chloroform was administered. The pain ceased, and she was completely relieved.

THE LOST KEY. Patrick LYON was a capital hand at making a safety-lock; and no less adroit in picking one also, in an honest way. A merchant in Philadelphia, having unfortunately lost the key of his iron chest, sent for Mr L. to come to his office, for the purpose of opening it. Patrick speedily accomplished the task, and when asked how much he charged for the service, demanded five dollars. The merchant was quite amazed, and refused to pay so much; whereupon the artist, who still kept his hand upon the ponderous lid, slapped it down again, and, leaving it in situ, departed.

The merchant was in a quandary; the contents of the chest were indispensable to his commercial operations; there was not another locksmith in the United States who possessed the open sesame of a door so hermetically circumstanced. He sent for Patrick a second time, and a second time did Mr LYON effect the liberation of the imprisoned bolt, taking care to hold in his hand the lid, as before. The merchant, quite delighted at again beholding his account-books, handed Mr L. a five-dollar note; but the chest had been opened twice, and Patrick demanded ten. The merchant was indignant at the former demand, but he was bouncing mad when he found the compensation doubled; he peremptorily refused to pay him; and Patrick, having slapped down the lid again, walked a second time leisurely back to his work-shop. The blacksmith, however, was finally triumphant; the merchant was compelled to send again for the ingenious mechanic, and, having received the sum of fifteen dollars, beforehand, he applied his instruments a third time, and having unlocked the chest, left it open for his employer's use.

EPITAPH. Here is my much-lov'd Celia laid, At rest from all her earthly labors! Glory to God! peace to the dead, And to the cars of all her neighbors.

A SCENE IN COURT. The New Orleans correspondent of the Charleston Courier, gives the following narrative of a difficulty which occurred between Judge McHenry and Hon. Pierre Soule, in New Orleans, on the 15th March last.

Two days ago, Mr Soule, our Senator, elect, was appearing in a case before the Criminal Court, when some discussion arose between him and Judge McHenry relative to the examination of a witness.

The Judge requested Mr Soule to take his seat, which he did, casting anything but a loving look towards the Court. Whereupon the Judge forgetting the old respected adage, that a cat may look at a king, or considering it a common law principle, not entitled to any weight in a Court where the civil law is in force, called Mr Soule up and examined him under oath, as to whether he meant any disrespect to the Court by that look. Mr Soule did not commit himself at all in his answers; but having alluded to the circumstance at the opening of his case to the jury, was stopped by the Judge, and again examined under oath.

But the Judge being more puzzled than ever by this answers, called upon the Attorney General for his advice, he however, very wisely, declined mixing himself up in the business—but it being insisted upon asked for twenty-four hours delay, I presume to consult his authorities on the legal signification of a look.

The next morning, however, the Judge, not having cooled upon his anger, decided that he would take the whole responsibility upon himself, and without allowing any defence to be made, sentenced Mr Soule to twenty hours imprisonment and a fine of one hundred dollars, the maximum of the penalty for a contempt. Mr Soule was escorted to the prison by a crowd of his friends, held a levee there all day, was serenaded at night—and this morning a host of the bone and sinew of the country, with flag and bands, went to take him from prison, and escorted him through the principal streets—furnishing an unexpected incident to the festivities of St. Patrick's Day.

The results of this judicial farce, was the escape of a notorious scoundrel, whom the jury acquitted, when Mr Soule threw up his case; and an address, in the House of Representatives, natives, asking the Governor to remove Judge McHenry, which came very near passing. The fine has been paid by subscription, no one being allowed to give more than ten cents.

GREEN WOOD.—No person should ever burn green wood. It is full of water and much carbon is wanted to dispel the water contained in the wood. There is about one fourth of water in every cord of wood.—Scientific American.

IMPROVEMENT IN CARRIAGE SPRINGS.—Mr E. T. Sprout, of Springville, Pennsylvania, has invented a new improvement in the carriage, by connecting the spring and reach together—the spring forming part of the reach. They serve thus combined as braces to the hind axle-tree. The body loops are also a spring, and there is nothing but steel from the axle-tree and bolster to the body of the carriage. The motion of the carriage is thereby rendered very easy, and only about fifty pounds of common steel spring is needed for a one horse vehicle. By this improvement carriages can be made lighter, cheaper, more simple and more durable. The spring used is the half elliptic, and the benefit of the whole elliptic is gained for the motion of Mr Sprout's improvement. Application has been made for a patent.—Sci. Amer.
