question which arose, was in regard to Gen. lilinois. A resolution was offered to refer his credentials to a select committee, who should inquire into his eligibility to a seat in the Senate. Mr Douglass argued that the question of the eligibility of General

Later From Europe.

From the Charleston Mercury.

BALTIMORE; March 9, 1849. Steamer America arrived at Halifax early this morning with two week's later intelligence from Europe. The following is an abstract of her news:

THE MARKETS.

Through the early part of the fortnight succeeding the departure of the Europa. the demand for cotton was most animated. On the 10th of February the excitment was tremendous, and not less than 50,000 bales were sold. From 10th to 19th prices on American advanced 1d : Brazils, the same; and Surats & a Id. Subsequent to the 19th the market relapsed into a somewhat inac-tive state, and prices declined ad, and the sales up to the 23d scarcely reached 34,000 bales. On the 23d the market was firmer, and the prices were recovering from their decline. The quotations for that day were for Fair Uplands, 47 pence, being an dvance of id.

The market for breadstuff's was dull. The market for Bacon was brisk. Beef dull.

The total number of cases of cholera in England and Scotland had swelled to 12, 395, of which 5,546 had proved fatal. FRANCE

The French government had despatched engineers to examine and report upon the alleged discoveries of the precious metals in California.

The French ministry have intimated an intention of acknowledging the Roman government, as formed by the people, out at the same time of expressing an anxiety that the Pope should regain his former position as a temporal Prince, as well as Shields' taking his seat as a Senator from the head of the Church. The Assembly sustained this avowal by unanimously passing to the next order of business.

A revolution had taken place in Tuscany, and the Duke had fled from the country. A provisional government had been Shields could not be raised until he had instituted in the papal states. Many causes, such as difference of persuit, of circumstance, of education, or of mental character, divide now, as they have heretofore divided, the people of the United States into political parties; but it is a proud spectacle to see the conflict of opinion, after having raged with its wildest fury through the course of a canvass, subside into peace at the returns of an election, and no other power ever be required to enforce the result than the power of that respect which American citizens feel for the laws and institutions under which they live.

A majority of the Senate of the United States are of the political party which most strove to defeat your election. I accord in political creed with the majority. To select me, under these circumstances, to announce to you your election to the highest office in the United States, will, I trust, be received as a token of their acquiesence, -not reluctant admission, but respectful acquiescence in the decision of the people. I feel, sir, that I can offer you assurance that from them yous administration will not encounter factious opposition; that, as far as difference of opinion will permit, they will give that sincere support which our common interest and constitutional obligations might lead you to expect.

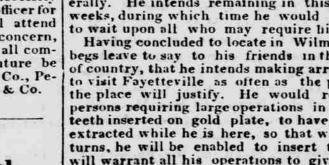

The character of your election, the general feelings of admiration and gratitude for your long, arduous, and most brilliant military services; a life of earnest devotion to your country, your whole country, give a high hope and expectation in the public mind that in taking the Chair first held by Washington, and which is sacred to every American heart, you will be able to hush the winds and still the waves of sectional strife, to pursue the constitution with all its harmonizing compromises, to promote the permanant prosperity and further illustrate the honorable fame of our Union.

Substance of Gen. Taylor's reply, which he read from a paper.

The President elect, in signifying his acceptance of the office to which he had been chosen by the people, avowed emo-tions of the profoundest gratitude, and declared his distrust of the ability to fulfil the expectations upon which their confidence was based; but gave assurance of a fixed purpose, to administer the Government for the benefit and advantage of the whole country.

In alluding to the fact to which his attention had been drawn, that the chairman of the committee represented a public body a majority of whom were opposed in political opinion to the President elect, and accorded with that majority, he recognised in it the deference to the popular will, consaid that it was to have been expected of pressed an ardent wish that he might be able in any degree to assuage the fierceness of upon all questions, even the question of In Austria, the Hungarians had gained party, or temper with moderation the con-
