The great Pacific Railroad Convention assembled at St. Louis on Monday last. There were about 600 delegates present, and the number continued to increase. A. Douglass, of Illinois, was chosen President.

The proposition to adopt a route different from that proposed by Mr Benton, produced much excitement. A proposal to memorialize Congress for aid to construct the Road, led to an animated discussion, which had not terminated way-invited friends to dine with himordered expensive wines, and had all his little bills, even down to his washing, paid at the hotel office. He borrowed money of several gentlemen, upon whom he imposed a trumped-up story of having his pockets picked of all his money. His baggage not making a very bulky show, he also spoke of having lost his trunks in traveling. After living at the Broadway, where he fared "sumptuously every day," for some ten days, atways neglecting to settle for board and washing, he concluded to accept the invitation of the venerable statesman to visit Ashland, made in the presence of the large crowd assembled to witness his departure for home. It so happened that the baggage of Gov. Letcher, Minister to Mexico, and the Hon. Orlando Brown, Indian agent, whose acquaintance he had also made during their stay at the Broadway, had been by some accident left behind, and was to be forwarded after them. As this impostor was going by the stage to Lexington, the trunks of these gentlemen, containing important matters, were by a friend of theirs intrusted to this young scamp, who took them in charge in his own name, promising to deliver them to the owners. He had not left the city long before his imposture was discovered. Upon the expose, a triend of Mr Clay in this city telegraphed the fact to Lexington, as well as to Gov. Letcher and Mr Brown. At the time the despatch reached Lexington he had installed himself regularly into the hospitalities of Mr Clay and others to whom he had letters from gentlemen here, or had been presented by Mr Clay himself. He was received into the first society of the Kentucky metropolis, and was flourishing extensively, as he did here, when this telegraphic despatch sheared off his laurels.
