SKETCHES OF TRAVEL. Editorial correspondence of the Charleston Courier. ALKEN, S. C. October 3, 1849.

Leaving Rome, on the 9th ult, I proceeded with my friend Judge Porter, to spend a few days with him, at his charming rural residence, at the village of Cave Spring, Georgia.

mounted on a rugged elevation and looking down into a wild valley or gorge. The upper or more elevated part of the place, or at least the Blacksmith's shop, on its summit is called "Mount Airy"; and the hamlet is also called Golgotha, or the Place of Skulls, because an immense quantity of Indian skulls and human bones were once found on the hill there, doubtless an old Indian burial ground.

While at Cave Spring, I attended the exercises of the Institute and was highly gratified both with the skill of the teacher and the proficiency of the pupils.

His given name I did not succeed in learning, although I made it the subject of frequent inquiry. He owned and occupied a valuable farm, situate on or near Cedar Creek, and directly on the public road from Rome to Cave Spring, about ten miles from the former and five miles from the latter.

While at Cave Spring, I attended the exercises of the Institute and was highly gratified both with the skill of the teacher and the proficiency of the pupils. Among other exercises, certain words were given the pupils to be wrought into sentences. The word "love" was given Miss Margaret M'Leod, of Montgomery county, Georgia, who wrote on the black board, as follows: "Many young children love to obey God and Christ. They love to hear some good preachers. The preachers preach the Gospel to them every Sunday."

James D. Wright, a very intelligent man from Oglethorpe county, Georgia, seemed ambitious to display his acquirements, and fully succeeded in his purpose. The principal gave him the words "career" and "Washington," as his theme. He resolved, however, to make an independent exhibition and, of his own motion, as the sequel will shew, substituted "Cromwell" for "Washington." He wrote thus: "Cromwell was very little known till he was more than forty years old, when a war broke out among the English themselves. He entered the army that was opposed to the King. He soon became General, and afterwards his career was rapid and brilliant."

THE BOILING SPRING. from the resemblance of its bubbling noise, in the opinion of good housewives, skilled in culinary matters, to the boiling of a pot, but which sound is doubtless attributed to a concealed fall, down some slight interior descent; before the water emerges from the side or the base of the mountain. The two springs unite their waters, and flow in one current into Little Cedar Creek.

THE PRODIGAL SON; and so significant and expressive were his signs and gestures, that I was able to follow him throughout the interesting narrative. The parts of the lecture, in which he described the prodigal reduced to rags and beggary, the father's joy, and the killing of the fatted calf at the return of the repentant youth, and the discontent of the envious brother, were exceedingly fine and touching.
