Blake's Patent Fire-Proof Paint The durability of this most valuable and exraordinary substance is such that it has only arrived at its best and most permanent state when all ordinary Paints begin to turn back to powder and rub or wash off. It is applied like ordinary Paint, and in a few months becomes a perfect stone which resists both fire and weather. Time seems to have no influence except to make it adhere closer and form a more perfect state.

The external part of the work is entirely finished, with the exception of a single tower, and the work in the interior of the building is making good progress.
