* Mr Everett's reply to Lord John Russell.

Hon. Edward Everett, the late Secretary of State, has written a letter in reply to Lord John estly laboring for it with brains or hands, and Russell's letter which appeared in many of the who fail to get consideration at home, because papers a few weeks ago. Whilst Mr Everett was they lack some element or elements of character. Sec'y of State the celebrated proposal for a tri-partite convention was made to this Good tri-set forth at length by Mr Everett. This docu-position in society which it fails to secure for ment brought forth, in response, a letter from Lord John Russell to the British Minister-Mr Crampton-which was communicated to our Government, published throughout the country, States. They are always recognized by well and became the object of general criticism and bred persons there, by the eagerness they discensure. As this letter of Lord Russel's is to some extent a rejoinder to Mr Everett's first reply in the communication to which we have alluded in the first part of this article. Some are disposed to consider this last production of position to perpetuate his official position of Secretary of State. We are not of that number. Mr Everett carefully abstains from following Lord John into any new matter, and confines himself strictly to the business of defending the positions of his former letter. In this we think he has done nothing contrary to good taste and good sense. If a man is not to be permitted to take care of his own reputation, we doubt if he will find others to do it for him.

The letter in question is characterized by a thorough knowledge of the subject in hand, as well as a profound acquaintance with the politics and history of the present century. If Lord Their airs and assumptions have been as incense John Russell does not, after reading it, feel like in the nostrils of the enemies of civil liberty in a used up man, it will be because, he does not Europe, because they lead to the conclusion that feel at all. By way of showing the character the habits of Americans are, in all respects, like those, class with class, of Europeans: wealth

American "Snobs" Abroad.

The Washington Evening Star of the 16th, has an article in which it speaks pretty plainly of that class of "snobs" from this side of the Subscribers are reminded that this is the water, who, of late years, have made up a considerable portion of those known as "Americans residing abroad." The Star says :

As a general thing, they are men and women who come into the possession of large estates without having gone through the process of honwied. They go abroad, because they fancy which was rejected, and the reasons therefor that their money will procure for them there the them here, though, Heaven knows even America is far too prone to overlook any short comings in the possessor of wealth. Hundreds of such persons live in Paris, hailing from the United play to outstrip all the aristocrats from England and the Continent there' assembled, in the magnificence of their style of living, of their equipages, &c. We have often heard of one of vention, that gentleman has thought proper to them, formerly a carpenter in Richmond, Virginia, who having inherited an immense French fortune, now splurges there (in Paris) with more gorgeous magnificence of display, than any other man, of any nation, in France. He has Mr Everett's as ill-timed, and savoring of a dis- taken the liberty to have the arms of the United States emblazoned on his carriage in a very glaring manner, simply to deceive strangers into the belief that he is actully the American Minster, and thus to obtain precedence for his coach in crowds; it being customary in France to grant precedence to the equipages of diplomatists over those of the public at large. Not only this man, but many other nominal Americans in Paris are distinguishable as American Snobs, by the depth of gold and silver lace on the trappings of their menials; alway, by-the-by, an inch-or two deeper, and much heavier than is customary in the liveries of persons whose characters embrace elements which entitle them to public respect. For years past, these people have been so many stalking lies or contradictions. the habits of Americans are, in all respects, like
