We understand that the power of these engines will far exceed what was attained under the low pressure system employed on the first trip-as they are now to be worked under condensed pressure.

....... THE OX THAT WOULDN'T STAY KILLED,-The Detroit Advertiser tells the following good one of a farmer in that vicinity who drove a very fat ox to market, expecting that the animal when killed would yield some twelve or thirteen hundred lbs. of beef. He sold the ox; buyer drove him off, and at night came back representing that the ox had been slaughtered, and offered to settle for it, but showing an account of its weight which fell short of the expectations of the farmer, who insisted on seeing the beef, and after examining and weighing which, with the tallow, he was forced to go home, though not more than half setisfied, with the mouey in his pocket. During the night after his return, the dead ox come back to his yard alive and well, having broken out of the butcher's enclosure; and the next day the farmer drove the same ox back to town and offered to sell him to the same butcher, who, having missed the animal, eyed the new comer rather suspiciously, and concluding that he it was who had been sold, bought the ox at a lumping price and paid for him this time.

Washington's Wealth.

The following is an extract taken from an old book published in 1803, entitled "Washington's Political Legacies;" ami dedicated to Miss Martha Washington:

VOLUME XIV-NO. 769.

> Mysteries of Venice.

We have read many curious things concerning the " Queen of the Adriatic;" but the follewing peculiarity, described by a recent traveler, is entirely new to us: "Most inexplicable of all is the incredible number of professors of the noble art of shoe-blacking-an art which hardly be said to exist in many cities that might be supposed to stand far more in need of it. Venice is, perhaps, the cleanest town in the world; all the streets and squares are paved with marble. There is no carriages, no dust, no mud brought in from a country road, no aecumulation of refuse and garbage, for it all finds its way at once out of the windows into the ty, and yet the shoe-blacks are running about in swarms, and moreover, seem devoted to their art with a really passionate fanaticism. However immaculate and polished I considered my boots to be, I never succeeded in escaping their zealous services, and it was so much the more provoking as the offer was always preceded by a searching critical glance at what I thought my quite irreproachable pedestals. One day I had the imprudence to make my appearance on St. Mark's Place with boots of really doubtful lustre. I might have foreseen the consequences. This time they did not ask me, but the first artist in blacking that caught sight of me, seized upon me, whether I would or not; and it was not till I had submitted to the operation, in all form, that I recovered my liberty, and was allowed to pursue my way. There are two other things in Venice that I have never been able to make out .- How do they build a house? and how do they put out a fire? Building materials, of course, can be procured, and there is certainly no want of water. But where is the ground on which firemen or It will be recollected that the caloric ship builders can take their stand! MEN OF THE REVOLUTION .- Gen. Green, in his despatches, after the battle of Eutaw, says; "Hundreds of lay men were naked as they were born." Judge Johnson, in his life of Green, says: "Posterity will scarcely believe that the loins of many men who carried death into the enemy's ranks at Eutaw, were galled by their cartouch boxes, while a fold of rags or tuft of moss protected the shoulder from the same injury from the musket." General Green says, in his letters to the Secretary of War: "We have three hundred men without arms, and more than one thousand so naked that they can be put on duty only in the most desperate cases. Our difficulties are so enormous, and our want so pressing, that I have not a moment's relief from the most painful anxieties. I have more embarrassments than it is proper to disclose them to the world."
