THE DEAD MEN'S TRAIN ON THE OLD COLONY

It states as a matter of common notoriety in Plymouth, that during the last summer months, between three and four o'clock in the morning there was regularly and distinctly heard upon the railroad the whistle as of an approaching train. As it was well known, however, that no train passed over the road at such a time in the morning, four gentlemen at the Samoset House determined to investigate the mystery. Accordingly, unknown to any one, they one morning, about two o'clock, stationed themselves on the railroad tract, about a mile from town, and awaited the arrival of the supernatural visitor. They did not watch long, nor wait in vain, for immediately they distinctly heard, for off in the heard-louder, nearer, nearer, still it camethe click of the rails in their chairs; the rush of whistle close at hand made them leap from the the hot breath of the panting steed was in their very faces as it passed; as the unearthly scream ceased, they heard the brakeman screwing up their brakes, the tinkle of a bell and a sound of
