[Cheers.] If he could think it were so, nd one would rejoice in its success more than he should. Renewed cheers.] He had been earnestly desirous of seeing a great and really independent State in Italy from the earliest period of his life. [Hear, hear.] No event would more strongly conduce to the security of Austria herself than the creation of a great and independent power in Italy. [Hear, hear. He had not the smallest hope of any such result from any interference on the part of France. The object of France was to transfer to herself that supremacy in Italy which had been possesed by Austria since 1814. [Hear, hear.] Austria had held it for the defensive purposes; France would hold is for important step to vards making the Mediterranean a French lake. [Hear, hear,] If they looked back to past times, and the wars of the French revolution, they would see with what gallantry Austria came forward, and what advantage we derived from her actions. In 1805, Austria, at her own great risk, rushed forward and prevented the invasion of this country. [Cheers.] In 1809, she again moved forward, she again suffered great defeats, but she facilitated by her movements the advance of the Duke of Wellingnot satisfactory and the proposals for timber 1805 and 1809, and her weakness, Austria Egain, in are to be revised and let out again to the high- 1813, joined the Allies, and gave into their lands, her territory in Bohemia, for the purpose of enabling Yours, &c., F. them to set against the French, and main y contributed in Germany, and afterward in France, to the liberation of Europe. For an Editor to fire well dependence and freedem "f Italy There were reasons, he believed, to suspect the purity of the motives of both parties. [Hear, hear,] But this they might observe ; while Russia, by bring ing 150,000 men on the frontiers of Poland, practically paralyzed Germany, we, likewise, in the movements of our fleet, were already if not paralyzed yet greatly checked and controlled by a Russian fleet of thirty sail of the line, which had been largely increased since the commencement of this war, for we could not venture to send the whole of our force to the Mediterranean, knowing if we did that, that the fleet might anchor at Spithead Yet we were told that Russia had assured the English Government that there was nothing whatever existing between France and herself contrary to our interests, and they accepted that explanation. If the Government was not af aid of an understanding between Russia and France, it more behooved the people of this country to be afraid, and to take own course for their deliverance. [Cheers.] They might depend upon it that the mere act of invasion, if the enemy were but a week in the oountry, and if At I o'clock a National Salute of 33 guns will be terminated by his expulsion or the destruction of all duce an injury to the material interests of this country which a hundred years would hardly recover. [Hear, hear,] He dared say there were a good many avetteville Independent Lt. Infantry .- Maj. Huske, among them who thought it possible to avoid all these mistortunes by preserving a strict neutrality. There could be no one more desirous than himself that we should not be involved in war. [Hear, hear.] But he would tell them this, that neutrality, although it put off war, did not prevent it. [Hear, [hear,] On the contrary, it might ultimately bring upon us a war infinitely more dangerous than that in which we refused to engage before. While two great nations were contending against each other, if we engaged in a war at least, we should have one of these nations with us; if we waited till one of these nations was trampled upon and beaten by the other, and had deprived it of strength to contend in the field, and then we were disposed to centend alone against the conqueror, we should contend alone against a power which had matured its forces, against a force disciplined to the field, and therefore to our disadvantage.

Walkup, Esq., of Union county, is a candidate for Congress in the 7th Congressional Dis- trict in opposition to Hon. B. Craige, the present in- cumbent. He will find it a Herculean task to op- pose his able compeditor. New MAIL CONTRACT.—Messrs. Holmes & Robin- son who are the contractors for the Warsaw meil, have taken charge of this line—the mail was in this morning between six and seven o'clock, A. M. We have great hopes of now having the mails run 	"Long may they wave." The Great Election to Come.—The Charleston Evening News drops this hint in reply to some pro- voking remark : "The Secession context of 1851 did not deminish our confidence in the spirit of resist- ance on the part of the people of South Carolina. It is unwise to impute to them the spirit of submission because they preferred to await-concurrence in ac- tion on the part of other Southern States. Some of their politicians have done so to their cost. And since that period some of the States have made de- cisive progress toward a proper comprehension of Southern rights and a determination to maintain them."	a most admirable selection, and one that reflects great credit upon the nice discrimination of the board of trustees of that highly popular Seminary. Should Mr. Lipscomb accept the honor, I feel assur- ed that no efforts will be spared on his part to maintain and if possible to enhance the high reputa- tion the Coilege has already attained. Mr Lips- comb is a gentleman of fine scholary attainments
