Thus ended the interview, wife sobbing distress-"I think five will do, mother;" and five it was. and angry. I can hear, even the voice of Minnie's mother-she has been gone twenty years, dear heart!-calling Jemmy Brun, from the head of the stairs : "Minnie! Say--Minnie!" "What, mother ?" "What shall we have for dinner to-day?"

"You are tired, mother; let's have a little ham and some eggs, with some peas from the garden, and bread." That settled the bill of fare. And so it was through the livelong day; for in all the domestic polity Minnie, though only prime minister, possessed fully regal power,

At this time-this forty years ago-I was, of ourse, in the prime of life, and full of the cares and esponsibiltie, which che ter and cling to one's mangood. I was largely engaged in active business, received some slight evidences of public cenfidence, saw a large family coming up about me-from all of which my natural positiveness and force of charter received more or less strengthening.

One night, when the last candle had been extinguishek and all was hushed, my wife said, with some "Hu-band, I feel uneasy about our Minnie."

"Minnie? Why, what's the matter: is she sick?" "No : she isn't sick, but-"But what, wife?" HAS returned from the North with a much larger stock Well, I m afraid she likes Je amy Brun." "Wlv. Miunie is-I mean, she seems to be-

The young man was of a literary turn of mind; had taught in an academy; was a writer, it was suid, for one or two periodicals. There was an air of sentiment about him, ih his looks and manners, which came precisely within the scope of my contempt. I had known it in others-in strong busible manifestation of sentiment; for those unthrifty sparkle of criticism in them. fellows who have never an eye for busines, but ride upon rhythm. I shook my head and all in good order. Provide sufficient shelter for all yet-- as why shouldn't she b. ?-- for Jemmy Brun had never said a word to her which any man might not have said to any maiden."

So wife and I got easy again. But what should I see one evening at twilight, while sauntering out under the shadows of my own grove of forest oaks not far from the house, but two figures flitting slowly hither and thither among the distant trees! Like a knave as I was, I sat on the g oundand watched them Watched then ne: vously, glarin, ly, till I saw Jemmy Brun give Minnie a kiss on her lips, and look lovingly after her as she slipped away.

I was reclining upon the sward by her path. Determined to meet and confront her there, I sat and watched her coming.

Ceatainly Minnie's face never wore that expression before. It was not gleeful, but it was radiant, and her eyes, which were bent on the ground, and hence only visible as she came very near me, had a light and a depth that I never saw before. She passed me; so utterly was the child absorbed in her

"Minnie!" I said, in a tone that startled myself scarcely less than the child.

"Oh!" and she sprang from the path as though the sound had been a rattle among the grass. I raised myself slowly-I am very slow when very angry-and standing stiffly before her glow-Meal, and in fa t every article commonly found in a ered down into her eyes-Minnie's beautiful living eyes-with a sterness which had never failed to terrify. I did not forbid them the house, as most angry fathers are said to do, but I told Minnie again that she had lost my love and care. Then I was so foolish as to see Jemmy Brum, and in a very silly speech inform him that since he was taking my daughter from her father without his consent, he need expect no gifts or favors new or henceforth. She would not be allowed to share in the family inheritance, nor should I render the least assistance if they "should come to want."
