THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

A fire damp explosion occurred in the Albion coal mine, in Wales, last week, killing two hundred and fifty miners.

The tragedy of the mine, in which so many humble toilers perished, will be forgotten by the world, in the excitement of a day; not so the tragedy of the taking-off of the one man, Carnot.

He was a man equipped for the highest forms and functions of usefulness and honor, and was standing at the head of a great nation whose destinies, in a large measure, had been committed to his care and keeping.

Whether it be right or wrong, just or unjust, that the death of one man should, because of difference in station, be esteemed a greater loss and more of a calamity, than the death of two hundred and fifty men, is not for us to say.

The argument so much relied upon by the opponents of the income tax, to-wit, that it is inquisitorial; betrays the weakness of their opposition. It only serves as a reminder of the fact that all laws are more or less inquisitorial in the very nature of things.

The South is free from the infection of anarchy. It has never found a foothold among our people and if it ever raises its head here it will be promptly and effectually crushed.

Clinton Democrat: During the thunder storm that passed over Clinton Wednesday afternoon, lightning struck a sycamore tree in the yard of Mr. Thomas Boykin.

CLEVELAND'S WABBLING.

Richmond Dispatch.

The Wilmington (N. C.) Messenger has allowed its temper to get the better of its judgment, and denounces Mr. Cleveland in unmistakable terms as a man who is "identified with the money power."

The Messenger's article is based upon one which recently appeared in the Dispatch defending Mr. Cleveland from the charge of inconsistency on the tariff question and showing that before the Democratic National Convention of 1892 had taken any action on the subject, he had signified to the Committee on Resolutions just what kind of tariff plank he desired to be placed upon, and that committee had agreed to report, and did report, the tariff resolution which he had signified his willingness to endorse.

We also showed that when the Chicago convention, acting in ignorance of the facts in the case, declared for a tariff resolution which Mr. Cleveland had not approved, and against the one which he had approved, and then nominated him upon the latter, Mr. Cleveland took occasion in his letter of acceptance to set himself before the world in the same position which he had taken care to occupy before the intimate personal friends whom he had consulted on this important subject.

Mr. Cleveland was wise enough to forget that if he went before the people standing on the platform which he did not himself desire to occupy his administration might be a failure, and he sharpened his pen, and in his letter of acceptance stated his opinions on the tariff question in such language as nobody could object to as wanting in perspicuity. He even went so far as to ridicule the impossible spectre of free trade, and the foolish notions to which some persons gave in their adhesion who ought to know better.

It would seem from this brief resume on the facts that nobody could reasonably expect Mr. Cleveland to do any more than he has done, unless, indeed, his opponents expected him to decline the nomination for President, such a course would, of course, have resulted unavoidably in the defeat of the Democratic party in the election of 1892, and that party would have sunk beneath the waves of the political ocean never to rise again.

The Messenger says that Mr. Cleveland accepted the law of the Democratic party as embodied in the Chicago platform of 1892. But as we have shown, we think, the Messenger misunderstands the policy which he adopted. Instead of being elected as a friend of the free coinage of silver, he was elected as the avowed opponent of that measure.

Whether it be right or wrong, just or unjust, that the death of one man should, because of difference in station, be esteemed a greater loss and more of a calamity, than the death of two hundred and fifty men, is not for us to say. We may add, however, that Carnot's place in France will be filled more readily than will those of the miners be in Wales, while the loss of the latter will occasion infinitely the more of personal suffering and distress.

The argument so much relied upon by the opponents of the income tax, to-wit, that it is inquisitorial; betrays the weakness of their opposition. It only serves as a reminder of the fact that all laws are more or less inquisitorial in the very nature of things, and especially all tax laws. As a rule, those who are urging this objection, are high protectionists, and therefore friends of the most thoroughly and offensively inquisitorial law possible of enactment. By authority of the administrative provisions of the tariff law, men's trunks are opened and overhauled, and the contents of their very pockets are subject to inspection! Even the bustles and skirts of women are not exempt, but may be subjected to the scrutiny of custom-house officials.

And yet, we are told, forsooth, by the whole tribe of high tariff inquisitors, with the squeaking voice of Davy Hill in the chorus, that the proposed income tax is inquisitorial!

A Moss Neck special to the Wilmington Messenger says that Mr. Appleton Squares was killed by lightning about six o'clock Thursday evening last.

Weldon News: Rev. W. B. Morton, formerly pastor of the Baptist church here, was knocked down and painfully injured while at the Louisville jail for the purpose of conducting religious services for the prisoners last Monday. Mr. Morton had been in the habit of visiting the jail to hold services with Tom and Calvin Coley, and a negro named Perry, under sentence of death. On entering the jail Monday the prisoners grabbed the jailer, pushed him behind the bars, and locked him up. Mr. Morton was grappling with one of the Coleys, when the negro struck him down with a bar of iron. The prisoners then all made their escape. They have been recaptured and returned to jail. Mr. Morton was painfully but not seriously injured.

Tired, Weak, Nervous, Could Not Sleep.

Prof. L. D. Edwards, of Preston, Idaho, says: "I was all run down, weak, nervous and irritable through overwork. I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and now everything is changed. I sleep soundly. I feel bright, active and ambitious. I can do more in one day now than I used to do in a week. For this great good I give Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine the sole credit. It cures."
