negotiations the original conditions advanced by Turkey, namely, the cession of Thessaly, the payment by Greece of an indemity of £10,000,000 Turkish, and the abrogation of the capis tulations in favor of Greek subects in Turkey.

The diplomats refused to accede to these conditions, and contended for the modifications of them that were supported by the powers. Ultimately, it was decided that M. Nelidoff, the Russian Ambassador, should formulate a memorandum concerning the ratification of the Turco-Grecian frontier, that M. Cambon, the French Ambassador, should prepare a memorandum regarding the capitula-tions, and that Sir Philip Currie, the British Ambassador, should draw up a document bearing upon the question of the indemnity to be paid.
