For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil.—Scripture.

Evidently in these words the Apostle is speaking of the presclear is that a happy life here, one that is lovable and filled with agine that to be happy in the next world means much suffering and gloom and unhappiness in this. Such indeed is not the case, for experience teaches just what the Apostle tells us.

The principal point, though, is that the first thing laid down by the Apostle as a condition is the guarding of the tongue from evil. It is not the only thing, for he goes on to mention others, but he places that first. Not without reason, indeed, for our experience to-day agrees closely with what he must have seen when he wrote those words.

Do we ever stop to think of how much of the sin and misery in the world is due to an evi tongue? When we read or hear of great climes, we say, as a rule, the cause is drink or jealousy or greed. When we see great povcapacity is unexcelled, and have The cruiser Montgomery arrived erty and suffering we say again the cause is drink. So it is, as a rule.
