

The Goldsboro Weekly Argus

The Weekly Argus goes to its many readers today in new form printed from one of the largest and best newspaper presses in the State, which has recently been installed in this office at great cost, and is to be supplemented soon by the most modern type-setting machine in service, that will render the Argus office the most completely equipped in the South, and will enable the editor to give to his patrons a paper every week that is up to his desire and that they can rely upon to give them all the news fit for their families to read.

Your Co-Operation Is Solicited

Of course all these improvements come at great expense to us, and we therefore earnestly appeal, here and now, to every reader of the Argus who owes us to send us a check, postoffice money order, or cash, or call in person and pay us. This is a reasonable request. We have been most indulgent with those in arrears. It is but just to us, and to yourselves, that you come in now, or send, and settle your account. Do not delay.

The Argus is widening and extending its territory of circulation. It has rounded twenty-one years of continuous growth and heroic adherence to its high standards. Its course in these twenty-one years shall be its pledge to the people of its unswerving policy for the future.
