The President's Health.

President Grant, who wichstood the assaults of the Confederate army, and endured all the bardships and privations of camp-life for four years, without apparent in jury to his health, has at length found his match in the Radical office-seekers So persistent and indecent have their assaults been that his Excel Its chief aim will be to encourage lency, at length, was compelled to succumb, and on Saturday last res treated from the field, giving orders be denied interviews with him. This was his only remedy. Whether it will prove effectual, remains to be seen. The pressure for office is so tremendous that nothing short of a military guard will save Executive from the rapacious legions which now infest the capital. Generals Taylor and Harrison both died in a little while after their inauguration, the cause of their untimely deaths having been fairly attributed to the annoyances of the officeseekers. Like General Grant, they were soldiers, not politicians, and therefore unaccustomed to the har assing cares and perplexities which inhere to the Presidential office .-His Excellency is reported better worst; and if, eventually, his fate is that of Harrison's and Taylor's. and the office-holders absolutely worry him to death, we shall have the old cry of poisoning, etc .-PHILA.
