SECOR MOTOR EXPLAINED. How the Gases are to be Exploded and thus Drive the Eureka on her Way.

New York Tribune. Mr. Secor's little craft, the Eureka, which was launched recently from 2 00 Poillon's shipyard, in Brooklyn, sits in the water like a duck. All that wonderful machinery which, accord-7 50 ing to its inventor, is to revolutionize the marine world is in its place. This renders her a bit "down by the stern." but when the water tanks and other 7 25 things that are to be stowed forward are in place she will be buried to her 5 00 water line. She is a perfect copy of the steamship America, reduced "eight diameters," as a microscopist would say. . Her builders hope to have her in order for a trial trip by New-Year's day. Through her main hatch an upright tubular boiler can be seen. but the rigidly enforced order, "No admittance," prevents further exami-2 50 nation of her machinery. In substance the latter consists of the fol-

The action of the former will manifestly be to drive the vessel forward, while discharges from the latter will drive her backward. Two valves are so placed that whenever one set of condults is in connection with the globe theother is cut off

The hollow globe has two inlets and

The action of the whole apparatus is as follows: The two inlet valves are opened at the same time by the valve mechanism, while the outlet valve is closed. Gas and compressed air then rush into the globe and mix in the proportion which shall be found to give the best results in explosion. Then, by a reverse action of the mechanism, these two inlet valves are closed simultaneously. The instant that is accomplished the outlet valve is opened and the highly explosive mixture of gas and air pours, out into the condult. Here it comes in contact with the glowing platinum wire or in the intense heat of the voltaic arc, and an explosion is the result. The gases thus formed then rush out of the condult, driving the water in

This is the mechanism as originally made in the details before the boat comes to be a working success. Many made before it reaches its highest efarise which will utterly destroy its usefulness. The principle seems to the original plan at least, present some bad points. The valve motion is complicated and liable to get out of order. It is not positive in its action; ject of newspaper lying and attempt | moment. In case of such failureyou will be a busy man, if you attempt | should occur before the valve which shuts off communication with the gas reservoir had closed, and the whole should be ignited-affairs would take an unpleasant turn for those on board.

Inquiries still continue to pour in upon the builders. The other day the Government at Berlin cabled its representative at Washington to investigate the matter, and altogether its possibilities as a system of propulsion for war vessels are attracting much
