Attend to it Now.

Many suffering people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into the grave, when by using Parker's Tonic they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them.
"I am 63 years old; have been sick nearly al my life, and ought to know something about medicine by this time. I have used Parker's Tonic freely for more than a year, and consid er it the best remedy I have ever known. In fact, I now find no other medicine necessary. For weakness, debility, rheumatism, and that distressing all-goneness and pain from which I suffered so long, it has no equal. I do not see

A VENDETTA.

Paolo Saverini's watow lived alone with her son in a miserable little house on the ramparts of Bonifacio. The city, built upon a projection of the mountain, and even hanging directly above the sea in some places, commands, across the strait that bristles with rocks, a good view of the lowest portion of the Sardinian coast. At its feet, on the other side, but almost flanking it entirely, an opening in the cliff shaped like a gigantic corridor serves it for a port, enabling the little Italian or Sardinian fishing smacks to advance to the first line of houses, after a long circuit between two abrupt walls. And every fifteen days comes the old wheezy steamboat which plies between the town and Ajaccio.

Upon the white mountain the mass of houses make a still whiter stain. They seem like nests of wild birds attached to the rock, and overlooking the terrible passage into which vessels never venture. Without repose the wind labors the sea, labors the naked coast, which it gnaws forever, and which has searcely a covering of green -it rushes into the narrow detroit, ravaging either shore. The long trails of white foam, clinging to the points of the countless rocks which pierce the water everywhere, have the aspect of tatters of clothes floating and quivering on the surface.

The house of the widow Saverini, perched upon the very edge of the cliff, as if soldered there, opened its three windows to the wild and desolate hori-

She lived there all alone with her son and their dog Allegro-a great, gaunt beast with long, bristling hair, of sheep dog breed. The dog aided the young man in hunting. One evening, after a quarrel, Antonio

Saverini was treacherously killed— with a single knife-thrust—by Nicolo Ravolati, who, the same night, fled to

When the old mother received the corpse of her child, that some passersby had found and carried to her, she did not weep at all, but remained for Patent Balance Slide Valve Engine a long time motionless, staring at the body; then, stretching out her wrinkled hand over the body, she proclaimed a vendetta. She would not allow anyone to remain with her, and she shut herself up alone with the dog, which howled. The brute howled continuously, standing up with his forepaws on the edge of the bed, turning his head toward his master's face, and keeping his tail between his legs. There he remained, motionless as the mother, who now, bending above the corpse, contemplated it with a fixed stare, while great, dumb tears rolled down her cheeks.

> Lying on his back at full length, still wearing his great, coarse jacket, torn and pierced at the breast, the youth seemed to sleep; but his blood was everywhere-on the shirt, that had been torn open when the first attempt at aid was made, on his vest, on his trousers, on his face, on his hands. Clots of blood had thickened in his beard and

The old mother began to speak to him. At the sound of her voice the dog ceased to howl.

"Never mind, never mind! Thou wilt be avenged, my little one, my own boy, my poor dear child. Sleep! sleep! Thou wilt be avenged; dost hear? It is mother who promises this to thee; and she always keeps her word, mother

And she bent down slowly over him, pressing her lips upon the cold, dead

Then Allegro again began to howl. He uttered a long, monotonous plaint, piercing, horrible. The two remained there until morning-the woman and the animal. Antonio Saverini was buried next Cotton Sold on Commission morning; and folks soon ceased to speak of him in Bonifacio.

He had left no brother, nor even any near cousins. There was no man to pursue the vendetta. The old woman From morning till night she watched a white speck gleaming across the strait-on the low shore beyond. It was the little Sardinian village, Longo-Sardo, whither Corsican bandits still fly for refuge when too closely pursued. They alone constitute almost the entire population of the hamlet, fronting the coast of their own fatherland; and they wait there for the chance to return to the mountain thickets. She knew it was in that village that Nicolo Ravolati was hiding. All day long, while sitting alone at her window, she looked across the water, pondering vengeance. But what was she to do without any man to aid -a weak old woman, with one foot in the grave? Nevertheless she had promised-she had sworn upon the corpse. She could not forget-she could not wait. What was she to do? She could not sleep at night for thinking of it-she could neither rest nor find peace of mind; she thought, and planned, and devised incessantly, obstinately. The dog, which slept at her feet, occasionally lifted his head with a start and howled at the empty air. Since his master had been killed the dog often howled like that, as if his inconsolable animal-soul was also haunt-

Now, one night while Allegro was howling a sudden idea came to his talk about that little appointment he and ferocious savage. She thought ovexcept necessary firewood for my tenants er it until morning, and, rising at the first gleam of dawn, she hurried to the church. There, prostrate upon the this extemporized kennel and went into the house.

She began to walk backward and forward in her room, without ever resting -glancing from time to time at the Sardinian coast. He was there-the murderer!

All that day and all the night following the dog howled. In the morning the old woman brought him a bowl of water, but nothing else-not even a bit of bread or a drop of soup.

Another day passed. Allegro, worn out with hunger, slept. When morning came his eyes glittered, all his hair bristled, and he pulled crazily at his

Then the old woman went to the butcher's shop, and bought a long, black sausage, which she took home with her. She kindled a wood fire in the yard, near the kennel, and began to cook the sausage. Allegro, wild the meat, that entered his very entrails leaped and howled, and foamed at the mouth.

Then the mother made a cravat for the straw man out of the smoking sausage. She tied it very tightly around the neck of the mannikin, as if to knots and splinters. Send for free was done she unchained the dog.

With one tremendous bound the dog reached the throat of the mannikin, and with his paws pressed, against the shoulders began to tear. When she thought the time had come old Mother Saverini went to confession and communicated one Sunday morning with eestatic fervor. Then she dressed herself in man's clothes, disguised herself as an old ragged beggar, and made a bargain with a Sardinian across the strait.

She had an immense piece of fried sausage in a canvas bag. Every once in a while she made Allegro smell it, so You are allowed a free trial of thirty days of as to excite him. The dog had eaten the use of Dr. Dye's Celebrated Voltaic Belt nothing for two days. . . .

They entered into Longo-Sardo. The old Corsican woman walked with a limping gait. She stopped at a butcher's shop and asked where Nicolo Ravolati lived. He had gone back to his old trade-carpentering. He worked all alone at the rear of his shop.

The old woman pushed open the door, and called him: "Hey! Nicolo!" He turned his head; she instantly let loose her dog, and cried out: "At him!-at him!-tear him, tear

The maddened animal bounded forward and caught him by the throat. The man struggled to throw off the brute,-fell on his back,-writhed, beat the ground with his feet for a moment. Then he lay very still, while Allegro buried his muzzle deeper and deeper in his throat, tearing the flesh away in great shreds.

Two neighbors, sitting on their door steps, said they remembered distinctly to have seen an old beggar leaving the house, accompanied by a great, gaunt, black dog, which, as it walked along, kept eating something-something brown, which its master was giving it. The same evening the old woman returned home. That night she slept well .- Translation from Contes du Jour et da la Nuit in New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Dodging Senators.

There is a good story going the rounds about one of the Cabinet officers. He is sorely pressed and oppressed by officeseekers and their backers, one Senator in particular being so persistent as to make himself a terror to the Secretary. The other day an old friend dropped into the department to pay his respects and to chat about the days when gray hairs were a myth and trouble an unknown quantity to the two boys; he wound up some specially stirring reminiscences with: "And what do you do with yourself nowadays, old fellow?" "Now, the present time?" said the
