Mr. McElhone is a tall man, but the men had been greatly surprised with a decidedly Hibernian cast of featmained the normal length of time. Strangely hot winds also came down into the valley, while elsewhere the atmosphere was of wintry chilliness. The hunters found that about a mile further up the stream the mountain side, where it extended under the river bed, became so hot that it heated the water which flows slowly there, until steam rose from the surface near the banks. This was faintly noticeable for a short distance further up, but beyond that the water by degrees resumed its normal state. The atmosphere was found to be very warm, and the slightest exertion caused perspiration. My father, an officer in the British service, was an enthusiastic amateur sea fisherman. He it was who taught The new Hotel at Warm Springs, N. me to catch mackerel, with a trout rod and fly, or rather with a white or grey feather tipped with scarlet and made in the form of a fish-not a fly. The good old gentleman was genial and garrulous, and nothing delighted him more Also of Highland Park Hotel, Aiken, S. C.) than to converse with the rough but honest fishermen of the coast. On one occasion on the east shore of Fifeshire, Scotland-near Pittenweem, I thinkgroup of fishermen were seated on the beach lazily mending their nets, at a distance of fifty yards or so from a boat that had been drawn up above high water-mark. Two or three pigs were rooting for mussels at some further distance off. Happening to point to the animals and make some remarks respecting those swine, my respected progenitor was astonished to see every man leap to his feet and with horror depicted on his face run at utmost speed and place his tinger on a nail or ring Everything New.
