FACTS ABOUT PLANETS.

Venus, Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Saturn and the Rest. Venus, so well known to us all as the loveliest object in the heavens, the evening and the morning star, resembles closely our own earth. Its size is about the same, its diameter being 7,660 miles; its day is almost the same length, and its density is rather less than five times that of water. It revolves round the sun at a distance of 60,000,000 miles in the space of 224 days. Like Mercury, however, Venus is moonless. Passing the earth in the meantime, we come to the well-known red planet, Mars. This planet is particularly interesting in many points of view. Next to Mercury, it is the smallest of the four interior planets, its diameter being only 4,200 miles, or little more than half that of the earth or Venus. Its distance from the sun is 141,000,000 miles, and it completes its circuit in 687 days. The length of its days does not differ materially from that of our own. Mars has two moons, and one of them presents a phenomenon unique in the system. No other moon behaves like this one, for it goes round Mars about three times every day; that is to say, it goes faster round Mars than Mars does on its own axis. Imagine our moon rising and setting three times every twenty-four hours. Another interesting feature in Mars is that we can see through our telescopes what seems to be the conflagration of its continents and oceans and also accumulation of snow at its poles.

We next turn our attention to the other group of planets—Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune. These are distinguished by their enormous size, immense distance from the sun, rapid revolution on their own axis, and very small density. The change from Mars to Jupiter is indeed remarkable. The latter planet, familiar to every observer of the heavens, is indeed a giant among giants. In mass it is equal to all the other planets put together, its diameter being less than 85,000 miles, and its distance from the sun 682,000,000 miles. It takes 4,332 days to complete its yearly revolution. Although of such enormous dimensions, it turns on its own axis in less than ten hours. From the small density (1.38) of Jupiter we should imagine it to be composed, in great part at least, of gaseous matter not yet cooled sufficient to form solid land. From certain phenomena on its surface it is evident it is almost completely enveloped in clouds, and it is doubtful if we have actually seen the real solid nucleus of this planet. Jupiter is attended by four moons, which revolve around him at various distances. The study of these bodies is of great interest; from watching their movements we got the first hint of velocity of light. Next in order in our outward journey comes Saturn, at a distance of 884,000,000 miles from the sun, and taking no less than 10,759 days to complete its revolution round that luminary. This planet, though less than Jupiter, is still of gigantic dimensions, its diameter being 11,000 miles. Saturn is the lightest of all the planets, its density being only 0.75, so that if placed in a huge ocean it would float with a fourth of its bulk above the level of the water. The most remarkable thing, however, about this planet, is the system of rings by which it is surrounded. What these rings are has long been a puzzle to astronomers, but the most plausible explanation seems to be that they are composed of myriad hosts of small meteoric bodies circulating at some distance round the body of the planet. Saturn has no less than eight moons under its control, and if it has any inhabitants like ourselves which is not likely, however—the heavens must be a strange sight to them, with these eight moons and meteoric swarms.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

The Possibilities of a Goose Farm. Several gentlemen from Virginia have been looking around through the mountain counties of Western Pennsylvania for the last week with a view to establishing a "goose farm." Among the party are John Bench, Henry Bailey, and James Connor, all of whom are from Baltimore, Md. The latter said: "Yes, we want to secure a farm of several acres, with a stream of water with rock bottom running through it, to start in the business of raising geese. It may seem like a rather curious business to engage in, but there is money in it. We got our idea of the money in the goose farm started some time ago down on the eastern shore of Virginia. Within an area of about 3,000 acres there live 5,000 geese of several varieties, attended by herders, and regularly fed with corn, etc. The object is the collection of down for quilts and pillows, and every six weeks a plucking takes place, only the best sides under the wings being plucked. Every goose will produce one pound of feathers per annum, which can readily be sold at 50 cents per pound. We want to start with about 500 geese, and calculate that they will raise 3,000 goslings a year. "In addition to the money received for feathers, we propose to sell off the young geese and can realize from 75 cents to $1 apiece for them. We have several farms in view along the line of the Pennsylvania Road, and up the Monongahela River, but will not make a definite choice for the farm for a few days yet. Geese live forever, you might say. Five hundred matrons will winter the birds, and the men will do the rest, barring accident. They raise their young with the utmost care, and, counting six goslings to a brood, you have 3,000 marketable fowls each fall besides the down. Of course, we expect to increase the stock as circumstances will permit.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Story of Andrew Jackson. Colonel A. L. Blackman, of Kentucky, told me lately a story of Andrew Jackson, which he heard in Pennsylvania last summer at a resort where he was staying. It seems that there formerly lived in that vicinity an odd character who was known as "Andrew Mason, millwright." He was an eccentric in his opinions as he was fearless in his expression. There came along by his place in 1807 a lumbering coach with two men in it. It stopped to water the horses. One of the men seemed to desire to obtain an idea of public sentiment, and began to ask questions of Mason as to the public feeling over Aaron Burr, whose trial was about to take place at Richmond. The old fellow replied with a good deal of vehemence that everybody believed that Burr was a traitor, and that Andrew Jackson was not far from it. The stranger jumped from the carriage at this remark, swearing like a pirate, and drawing a sword, chased Mason out of the road and into the fields for safety before he could realize that it was Jackson whom he was addressing. Jackson had harbored Burr in the West, and then was on his way back to Richmond to the trial.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

An Indian Millionaire.

A somewhat notable character has died in Bombay, says the Times of India, in the person of Mr. Kessowjee Jadwice, a wealthy Bhattia merchant, who was popularly spoken of during life as a "millionaire." The amount of property he has left behind him does not probably fall far short of 90 lakhs of rupees. Although one of the wealthiest men in Bombay, he lived in very humble style at Mandvie, in the native town, and affected no greater display than a man earning a small salary might have done. His dress differed in no respect from that of his fellow-caste-men of low degree, and he drove about in a broken-down one-horse shigram. Like many other wealthy men of penurious habits he was extremely litigious. His disagreements with his son, owing to the dissolute and extravagant habits of the latter, will be fresh in the recollection of many in Bombay. The son fell into the hands of the money-lenders and others, who expected that the father would, as he had done on numerous occasions previously, discharge his debts, but the old man seems to have determined that he would no longer minister to his son's extravagances, and he refused to lift a finger to save him from jail. Lilladhar Kessowjee, the son, was on the debtor side of the jail for some time, and eventually died from disease aggravated if not brought on by his excesses. Owing to the notoriously evil life of the son, and his flagrant breaches of caste rules, Mr. Kessowjee and his family were excommunicated by their caste until they had made a pilgrimage to Benares to expiate their sins by the course of religious discipline prescribed on such occasions. The old man was too feeble to undertake this journey, and died under the ban of his caste. As a consequence, enormously wealthy as he was, his funeral ceremonies were only attended by about ten or a dozen persons. It is believed that the bulk of the deceased's immense property will go to a nephew, a lad some eight years of age, whom he had some intention of adopting, although he did not live long enough to have the necessary adoption ceremonies performed.

Superstition of Fishermen. My father, an officer in the British service, was an enthusiastic amateur fisherman. He it was who taught me to catch mackerel, with a trout rod and fly, or rather with a white or grey feather tipped with scarlet and made in the form of a fish—not a fly. The good old gentleman was genial and garrulous, and nothing delighted him more than to converse with the rough but honest fishermen of the coast. On one occasion on the east shore of Fifeshire, Scotland—near Pittenweem, I think—a group of fishermen were seated on the beach lazily mending their nets, at a distance of fifty yards or so from a boat that had been drawn up above high water-mark. Two or three pigs were rooting for mussels at some further distance off. Happening to point to the animals and make some remarks respecting those swine, my respected progenitor was astonished to see every man leap to his feet and with horror depicted on his face run at utmost speed and place his finger on a nail or ring bolt or thole pin or other piece of iron of the boat, to break the evil spell. At the same time my amazed parent was warned never again to utter the word swine on the sea-coast. If he should have occasion to mention the malign animals at all he was to call them "beasties." Subsequent inquiry could only elicit a confused statement that the devil enters into swine (not beasties), causing them to run down a steep place into the sea and spoil the fishing.—American Angler.

Harper's Young People. AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY. The position of Harper's Young People as the leading weekly periodical for young readers is well established. The publishers spare no pains to provide the best and most attractive reading and illustrations. The serial and short stories have won dramatic interest, while they are wholly free from whatever is pernicious or vulgarly sensational. The pictures on natural history and science, travel and the facts of life, are by writers whose names are the best assurance of reliable and contented illustration. Papers on athletic sports, games, and pastimes give full information on those subjects. There is nothing cheap about it but price. An epitome of everything that is attractive and desirable in juvenile literature.—Boston Courier. A weekly feast of good things to the boys and girls in every family which it visits.—Brooklyn Evening Post. It is wonderful in its wealth of pictures, information and interest.—Christian Union, N. Y.
