CHARLOTTE FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The Fall Session begins September 1st, 1886, and closes January 15th, 1887.

No Institute for Young Ladies in the South has advantages superior to those offered here in every department. An experienced and highly accomplished corps of teachers, selected from some of the best schools North and South in which they were teaching, has been engaged for next year.

Prof. ALBERT ROWS, the new Director of Music, has been teaching in Italy, New York and Massachusetts for twenty-five years with eminent success. No one could come more highly commended as a refined Christian gentleman, an American citizen, and well known in New York and Brooklyn, and in Massachusetts. The Music Department here will not be surpassed anywhere either in thoroughness or popularity.

The Art Department of this Institute still sustains its supremacy among Southern institutions.

During the severe weather of last winter it was proven that the method by which the rooms in this Institute are warmed is superior to any other in health, comfort and safety, and that there is no possibility of accident or failure in this important matter.

Expenses less than in any Female Seminary offering equal advantages. TERMS. For BOARD, including furnished rooms, servants' attendances, lights (gas), with TURF in everything in full Collegiate course, including ancient and modern languages, callisthenics, for each session, $100

Correspondence solicited. For catalogue, with full particulars address, Rev. W. M. R. ATKINSON, Charlotte, N. C. June 25-wt then awt wrong now, may ruin your character by and by. Remember what you are doing and see that every brick is kept straight.—Rev. R. Newton.

MENTAL GROWTH OF CHILDREN.

Very often we read of cases where parents are deceived in the character of their children. The truth is, they grow up much faster than parents are aware. While a mother innocently believes her little girl's mind is entirely occupied with her dolls and pets, in reality the child is weaving romances in which some callow youths is the central figure, and herself the heroine.

She may fancy her boy is entirely engrossed with his marbles and his balls, but the lad himself has already determined his future career of renown in the pirate's or highwayman's fascinating profession. It is a terrible revelation when a surreptitious flirtation with the telegraph messenger, or a midnight escapade, shows too plainly where the heart of the child is placed.

We know a case in which a boy of fifteen was charged with a crime, and finally confessed himself guilty. The surprise and agony of his mother were heartrending. "It cannot be," was her cry, "he is a little boy. Why, he is my baby. Every night he puts his arms around my neck and kisses me. It is not possible." Had the boy actually been a babe in the cradle, the mother would have been no more astonished. It is a fiction pleasing to the parent's hearts that their children, too young to know or dream of any evil more heinous than childish peccadilloes. But it is a fiction fraught with grave perils. Every mother ought to know if her boy smokes. Yet we can point to a half-dozen boys who puff along the streets, whose mothers firmly believe them to be angels of light, and would be indignantly incredulous if told the facts.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLE

In his last work, "The Unity of Nature," says: "The third case of animal instinct, which I shall here mention, was of a different but of an equally common kind. In along the side of a river with overhanging banks, I came suddenly on a common wild duck, whose young were just out. Springing from under the bank, she scattered out into the stream with loud cries and with all the struggles to escape of a helplessly wounded bird. To stimulate the effects from disease, or from wounds upon the human frame is a common necessity of the actor's art, and it is not often really well done. The tricks of theatre are seldom natural, and it is not without reason that 'theatrical' has become a proverbial expression for false and artificial representations of the realities of life. It was therefore with no small interest that on this, as on many other occasions, I watched the perfection of an art which Mrs. Siddons might have envied. The labored and half-convulsive flapping of the wings, the wriggling of the body, the straining of the neck, and the whole expression of painful and abortive effort, were really admirable. When her struggles had carried her to a considerable distance, and she saw they produced no effect in tempting us to follow, she made resounding flaps upon the surface of the water, to secure that attention to herself which it was the great object of the manoeuvre to attract. Then rising suddenly in the air she made a great circle round us, and returning to the spot renewed her endeavors as before. It was not, however, necessary; for the separate instinct of the young in successful hiding effectually baffled all my attempts to discover them."

Clear the Way

For the escape from the system of its waste and debris, which, if retained, would vitiate the bodily fluids and overthrow health. That important channel of exit, the bowels, may be kept permanently free from obstructions by using the non-gripping, gently acting and agreeable cathartic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only liberates impurities, but invigorates the lining of the intestinal canal, when weakened by constipation or the unwise use of violent purgatives. The stomach, liver and urinary organs are likewise reinforced and aroused to healthful action by this beneficent tonic and corrective, and every organ, fiber, muscle and nerve experiences a share of its invigorating influence. Unobjectionable in flavor, a most genial and wholesome medicinal stimulant, and owing its efficacy to botanic sources exclusively, it is the remedy best adapted to household use, on account of its safety, wide scope and speedy action.

The Fireside.

THE TIRED MOTHER.

They were talking of the glory of the land beyond the skies. Of the light and of the gladness to be found in paradise. Of the flowers ever blooming, of the never-ceasing songs. Of the wandering through the golden streets, of happy white-robed throngs. And said father, leaning cozily back in his easy-chair. (Father always was a master hand for comfort everywhere):

"What a joyful thing 'twould be to know that when this life is o'er, One would straightway hear a welcome from the blessed, shining shore!" And Isabel, our eldest girl, glanced upward. She was painting on a water-jug, and murmured: "Yes, indeed. And Martin, in a moment dropped her book. And, "Yes, indeed!" repeated with a most ecstatic look.

But mother, gray-haired mother, who had come to sweep the room. With a patient smile on her thin face, leaned lightly on her broom. Poor mother! no one ever thought how much she had to do. And said: "I hope it is not wrong not to agree with you. But seems to me that when I die, before I join the blessed. I'd like just for a little while to lie in my grave and rest."

TAKE YOUR CORSET OFF.

"O, dear! I don't know what is the matter with me, I am so tired all the time I can't stand anything; I can't walk three blocks. I have neuralgia every little while, I'm good for nothing, and yet there seems to be no disease about me. I wish you'd tell me what ails me." The speaker was a beautiful girl, about 19 years old. Nature had intended her for a magnificent specimen of womanhood. She was not less than 5 feet 7 inches in height, but, with shoulders and hips broad in proportion, she measured only 22 inches around the waist.

Of course, she asserted that she did not dress tight; but when told that in order to have good health she must leave off her corsets she rebelled. "Why, how would I look without a corset?" she exclaimed. "I'd be a perfect fright." What reply was there to be so convincing a statement? But by the light of science her whole body was illuminated, and she was a perfect fright as it was. I never see such a figure that I am not reminded of Hiram Power's query in regard to a fashionably attired lady: "I wonder where she puts her liver?"

It is easy enough to prove that the breathing capacity is actually lessened by the corset, even when not worn tight. Any one wishes to try the experiment can sit down and begin to draw in the deepest breath possible. When the limit of the corset is reached, unclasp it and see how widely its clasp can be separated by the action of the lungs alone. Then if you bear in mind that these muscles have been weakened by non-use, and that with full liberty they would increase in strength, you will be able to imagine how much the corset has lessened the vital capacity. I saw a fine illustration of this a few days since, when I called upon a lady whose literary labors are wonderful. She received me in a neat loose dress, in which every organ of the body had full play. She rejoiced in her perfect physical freedom. She ran up and down stairs with the lightness of a child, and felt no palpitation of heart or oppression of lungs. Late in the day she dressed to go out upon the street with me, and put on a corset. "I do it in deference to the opinion of my friends," she exclaimed. "They complain if I outrage their sense of propriety by appearing without one, but I do penance all the time I wear it."

We started off at her usual brisk pace, but in a very little while she said to me: "I can't walk so fast when I wear a corset. I can't breathe, you see." And so to accommodate her diminished powers of breathing we slackened our pace, and soon she commenced to look weary, her cheerful face became less frequent, her face began to wear an anxious look, her vital capacity was lessened, and her whole system felt the effect of it. "I could accomplish nothing at all," said she, "if I were compelled to wear a corset all my work."

I asked a young lady to sing for me the other day. With some hesitation and blushes she excused herself, saying: "Really, I shall be obliged to decline; the fact is, I am just breaking in a new corset, and it hurts me so I can hardly live." "Why do you wear it, then?" "Oh! I'd look so odd without a corset."

To me she would look far better, for I could see that her health was failing, her cheeks paling, her nerves starving for the vital breath of God's pure air, which the corset was shutting out of her lungs.

"We girls are always glad to undo our corsets and draw a long breath at night," said one frank girl to me. "We don't wear them tight; we can put our hands under them always, but it does seem so good to get them off and breathe just as big as we can."—Dr. Mary A. Allen, in Herald of Health.

ONEBRICK WRONG.

Not long ago some workmen were engaged in building a large brick tower, which was to be carried up very high. The master builder was very particular in charging the mason to lay every brick with the greatest care, especially in the first courses, or rows, which had to bear the weight of all the rest of the building. However, one of the workmen did not mind what had been told him. In laying a corner, he very carelessly left one of the bricks a little crooked—out of the line; or, as the masons call it, "not plumb." "Well," you may say "it is only one single brick in a great pile of them. What difference does it make if that was not exactly straight?" You will see directly. The work went on. Nobody noticed that there was one brick wrong, but as each course of brick was kept in line with those already laid the tower was not put up exactly straight, and the higher they built it the more insecure it became. One day when the tower had been carried up about 50 feet a tremendous crash was heard. The building had fallen to the ground, burying the workmen in the ruins. All the precious work was lost; the materials were wasted; and, worse than this valuable lives were sacrificed; and all because one brick had been laid wrong in the start. The workman who laid that brick wrong little thought what a dangerous thing he was doing, and what terrible harm would result from his neglect. My dear young friend you are now building up your character. In the habits you now form you are laying the foundation of that character. One bad habit, one brick laid
