A PROFITABLE PLANT.

The Castor Oil Bean and Its Uses---Some Valuable Suggestions.

The cultivation of the castor oil in profound contemplation of a human plant has recently received the attenship to the castor oil in profound contemplation of a human skull, says the Philadelphia News. plant has recently received the attention of some of the planters of the State looking around for some paying crop. While the limited demand for the oil, which is one of the "necessary evils" that humanity some times needs, puts the castor bean outside of the list of great profitable subjects of cultivation, yet the many uses to which the plant and its products can be put, entitles it to careful examination.

Skull, says the Philadelphia News, "There is a remarkable history connected with that head," said Booth. "It properly belonged to my father, but he never came in possession of it, and a few hours ago Dr. Morris, of this city, handed it to me as my property by the right of inheritance." The story connected with honesty, fairness, and in good faith toward all parties, and we authorise the control the Drawings themselves, and in good faith toward all parties, and we authorise the right of inheritance." The story connected with it, as he then related it, ran about as follows:

Porcher's "Resources of the Southern Fields and Forests" tells us: "The plant thrives best in a high sandy loam although it may be cultivated with success in almost any soil tole-rably fertile, or in any climate or soil where Indian corn will thrive. In the cooler part of the Union it may be planted in hills two feet by three apart, two seeds in a place, as early in the spring as the warmth of the in the spring as the warmth of the ground and the season will admit but in the South, where the season is longer and the plant assumes the character of a tree, the hills should be six or seven feet in one direction, and three and a half feet in the other —receiving one seed to a hill, covered to the depth of two inches. Bees infest the castor plant when in flower. The bees do not attack the flower. The bees do not attack the female flowers, which are arranged on the upper side of the inflorescence, but they attack the male flowers, which are arranged below, and eat up the pollen dust. This is excellent, because agriculture might as well be carried on with a castor plantation, and an abundant supply of honey and wax be obtained.

The weet potato is a luxury, and when in its natural state and out of season, is difficult to get, except at exorbitant prices, owing to its liability to rot and freeze. This invention designs so to treat the potato that the starchy and saccharine matters, with a quantity of the glutinous portions, may be obtained and readily transported to any portion of the world as a staple product similar to flour; and it being a well-known fact that chemical changes which accrue to the liquid portion of the potato in climates other than where it grew destroy its natural flavor, an essential and when in its natural state and out stroy its natural flavor, an essential feature of the process is to quickly evaporate such liquids while the potato is in a healthy condition, and reduce it to a flour or meal which will retain the natural flavor of the esculent. The product obtained according to the invention may be made into puddings, pies, cakes, custards and

All the great perfumers of London and Paris use castor oil for the manufacture of golden oil, which have been the head cool and the skin and pores of the skin, and roots of the hair soft and open. The oil is used for textile fabries, to fit them for dyeing or printing, for which purpose the Indian dyers and calico printers in variably use it. It is one of the best oils for dressing tanned hides and skinds, and for preserving leather, because it gives strength, durability, tenacity and beauty to them. The oil cake has also found an excellent use, in addition to its being one of the most excellent manures we have as a material for making gas, which gives a superior light. "That shall be remedied," said Fontaine, quietly, and he then and there made his will, devising his head to Junius Brutus Booth after he had been hanged. Booth left Louisville before Fontaine was executed, and the incident passed from his mind. Years afterward when he was dead and his son was playing in Louisville, Dr. Morris called upon Edwin Booth, told him the story I have related, and presented him with Fontaine's skull, which he subsequently used in "Hamlet."
