THE RICE CROP.

A Few Observation and Suggestions to Our Rice Farmers.

In the first place, the crop is a bountiful one, and of a much finer quality Odd-Fellows at Boston, returned home tensively under the dry culture, or ania, is enormous, thousand of acres -At the request of a number of the citizens of school district No. 45, Hutton for a small twig containing a ly fine seasons of rains the upland ly fine seasons of rains the u crop of all these States is almost perfection. The harvesting is in full blast and with the fine weather for that, seems distined to rule low for awhile and places: at least. Every body we talk with who grows rice seem crazy to put it on market, all at once. That is not only so hereabouts but throughout the rice growing districts, and the consequence in our judgement will be that this ex-treme haste to sell will put so much stock on the markets that there will be a glut or surfeit which will necessarily run values down and moneyed men will step in and buy up and store it, and sell it out as the trade demand official appointments elsewhere in this issue.
