The Del Sarte System.

"Gracefulness," says La Rochefoucauld, "is to the body what good sense is to the mind," and to judge from the success of the Del Sarte system, this is also the opinion of fashionable women. But while good sense is verily a gift of the gods, the followers of Del Sarte believe grace to be a matter of cultivation. At any rate, the popular teacher of this accomplishment finds the hours of the day too few to accommodate her pupils, and society is quite flooded with young women who move by rule, and whose every gesture has been acquired at so much a lesson.

They make the most bewitching little pictures, enter and leave a room, or a carriage, to the admiration of all beholders; salute their acquaintances and friends with just the proper shading of condiality; walk correctly, stand correctly, seat themselves artistically, and are, in fact, such models of grace that the most impartial ob-server is moved to say "Thank you," to the suffer the build of and soap and soap me a start in life."- Waskington (D. A Hint to Mothers.

One hour of work trying to give pleasure to your children's friends will teach them more of true charity and benevolence than all the talk in the world. "I've got the best mother in the block," said a little chap the other day; and when the other boys demanded proof he pointed proudly to the flag she had made for the "company," the epaulettes that adorned every one of the squad, and announced triumphantly: "And she's a
