About three miles from Salisbu the Lexington road, is an old log on which was built in the days of the Newolution. The structure until in was inhabited, and is still well pe ed some patch work having kept from decay of time. The curlouity the house consists in the fact that it full of port holes. The holes are als midway between the ground and the caves of the roof, and are funnel-shap ed, the widest opening being on the side being only large enough to admit the stock of the rifle to go through. Walls have ears, but if the old walls' of that log cabin only had mouths what a tale they could tell. The the road to the Yadkin riv which Cornwallis marched over w in pursuit of Green. The port boles extend all around the house, and your correspondent counted about half dozen on each side. The house ough to be preserved as a relic.
