Lines to a Crow.

BY JOHN ONSLOW.

I've heard thy clamoring change

Or seen thee sunning high upon rung Among the fields of yellow grain,

You blasted pine across the plain.

Nor summer heat, nor wintry

Nor drougth nor pouring floods of May stop thy bold assertive caw.

Methinks a friendly note I've

When I stroll by, old raven bird

Old sable buccaneer !

A robber art thou !

Omnivorous of taste.

Or wild barren waste

flaw,

Bold thou art and tree,

Yet cautious, too, withal,

Yet often in thy raucous croak

Any jeering in thy call,

So constant to our clime,

Who owns or tills the vine.

I've seen thee with thy gaping beak

Perched in the shade above the

When youder yokel of the farm

Creeps cautious out with new-bought

And vain essays to do thee harm

In drowsy silence -yet alert.

note thy parlous fright,

Thy jet suspicious eye, Thy swift and silent flight

Adieu, old corbie crow!

Better thou art, I know,

crack

For all thy rant and caw,

Than they who prate of law.

Yet hide enough of base desires

Neath all their whining, canting

To damn them in the Devil's fires

It then, by a process known as segmentation, splits up into a dozen or more little spores again, which for a short time are free in the blood and unattached to the corpuscles. It is just as the segmentation occurs that the chill comes on, which explains the periodic recurrence of the chill every twenty-four hours, and as it has been found that quinine is most effective in killing the germs while they are free in the blood and not buried in the substance of the corpuscles, the best time to give quinine is just be fore the chill is expected.

The method of the introduction of the malarial poison, the plasmodium, certainly the chief method, has been demonstrated beyond all question to be the sting of a certain stolen.
