Red Saunders

... By ...
HENRY WALLACE PHILLIPS
COPYRIGHT, 1902, BY McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY

There was a great din of whacking and hammering that morning. Red worked like a horse now, that he had been company. A sudden thought struck him, and he went into the house. "Mattie," said he. "Well, Will!"

"I see a use for the rest of that nice big roast of beef I smell in the oven—let's have all these fellows stay to dinner and give 'em one good feed. What do you say?"

"Why, I'd like to, Will, but I don't know—where'll I set 'em?"

"Couple of boards outside for a table—let them sit on boxes or something. Got plates and things enough?"

"My, yes! Plenty of such things, Will!"

"Then if it ain't too much trouble for you we'll let it go!"

"No trouble at all, Will—it will be a regular picnic."

"Boys, you'll eat with me this day," said Red.

They spread the board table beneath an old apple tree and cleaned up for the feast. The kitchen stove shed with an apologetic "Sorry to trouble you, Miss Saunders," or such a matter as each went in.

Just as Miss Mattie was withdrawing the meat from the oven there came a knock at the door.

"Goodness, gracious!" she exclaimed. "Who can be that now? Will, will you see who that is? I can't go."

"Sure!" said Red and went to the door. There stood two women of that indefinite period between forty and sixty, very decently dressed and with some agitation visible in the way they fussedly adjusted various parts of their attire.

They started at the sudden spectacle of the huge man who said pleasantly, "How der, ladies?"

"Why, how do you do?" replied the taller instantly and in a voice she had never heard before. "I hope you're well, sir," a remark which filled her with surprise.

"Thanks, I'm able to assume the perpendicular, as you can see," responded Red, with a handsome smile of welcome. "How do you find yourself?"

perience in the world, which was pretty fairly complete, had told him that craft was a necessity for weak natures; nevertheless he cured not for those who used it.

In his part of the west a man would no more think of giving a false impression of his financial standing to alter his position in one's regard than he would wear corsets. Money was of small consequence; its sequelae of less.

Men spoke openly of how much they made, how they liked the job, how their claims were saying. Such matters were neutral ground of chance conversation as the weather is in the east. The rapid and unpredictable changes of fortune gave a tendency to make light of one's present condition.

A man would say "I'm busted" without any more feeling than he would say "I have a cold." Now, in Fairfield, that is not likely to happen in that respect, one of the principal objects in life was to conceal the poverty which would persist in sticking its gaunt elbows through the cloth of words spread over it. Red asked straightforward questions—shrewd ones, too—seeing that the other was one of his own kind and would not resent it.

Let's wanted nothing better than a chance to expand on the subject. "I wouldn't mind getting into a business of some kind as long as it was making things," he said. "I don't banker to keep store much. Suppose I go along with you when you look up how much straw is raised and the rest of it?"

"Would you?" cried the young fellow eagerly. "By George, sir, I wish you could see your way clear to take hold of it. Could you stand $10,000, for instance? Excuse the question, but I'm so anxious over it—"

"Lord, what's the harm of asking facts?" said Red. Then, with a gleam of genial pride, "Ten thousand wouldn't break me by a darn sight."

Let's boyish face fairly glowed. "It was my good angel made me stop in front of your fence," he said. "I saw you all eating in here, and you looked so jolly that I thought I'd stop on the chance you might be the man I was looking for. Now I'll go right on and see Mr. Demitt and find out what he wants to do in the matter."

"Wait for the wagon and you can ride," said Red. "Boys gone home to get their tools," he said. "I saw you all eating in here, and you looked so jolly that I thought I'd stop on the chance you might be the man I was looking for. Now I'll go right on and see Mr. Demitt and find out what he wants to do in the matter."

"Come on, boys!" said Red, and he saw party rose from the table. Later the wagon came up.

"Well, good day, Lett," said Red. "If you can't get quarters anywhere else, come on and help me hold the barn down."

"Do you sleep in the barn? Then I'll come back sure. Tell you how it is, Mr. Saunders. I've been stuck up in a three by nine office for four years—no bed, no good day, Lett, I can see after this working for me this afternoon. In the meantime, if you're not too proud to take hold and help us with this dot doted fence, I'll be obliged to you."

"Bring on your fence! I'm ready," said Lett.

"Come on, boys!" said Red, and he saw party rose from the table. Later the wagon came up.

TWO MINUTE SKETCHES

Alexander T. Stewart.
By ROBERTUS LOVE.

For forty years the merchant king.

A. T. STEWART was not a merchant prince. He was the merchant king. For forty years he reigned with undisputed title. He was the greatest and most famous merchant of his time in the entire world. He built up the first really great retail store and wholesale establishment in America. His retail house was the largest in the world at the time. His name was powerful abroad, and throughout the United States it was a household word, spoken with awe and wonder. Old men of today recall the name of A. T. Stewart as an inspiration to business ambition in their youth. Men in early middle life remember that the same name was more familiar to them than that of any other business man when they were small boys.

Mr. Stewart died thirty-one years ago, leaving no children. His widow died ten years later. The magnificent marble mansion in which he lived on Fifth Avenue, New York, has been razed and replaced by a commercial structure. Eleven years ago his successors in the great store on Broadway assigned, and the Stewart store building is now a Wanamaker establishment. Even the body of Stewart was stolen from its vault in New York, and there is still a dispute as to whether it ever was recovered. The Stewart name and business and fortune all have disappeared, but his fame lives.

A. T. Stewart was a Scotch-Irish man, born in Ireland and educated at Dublin university. He was a classical scholar, devoted to books in his early life and with no idea of entering trade. When he came to America, at the age of twenty, in 1823, he became a teacher in New York. Two years later he returned to Ireland to claim a legacy of about $5,000, and upon the advice of a friend in New York he bought in Dublin a stock of laces and other goods, which he brought back to America with him. He opened a small shop, advertised his wares and sold the goods at an enormous profit. This success revolutionized Stewart. He devoted his life to trade.

At the outset Stewart made up his mind as to his course in business. He determined to be perfectly honest, never to misrepresent his goods, always to watch every nook and corner of his business and to add more customers by pleasing those he got. It was his habit in old age that in all his career he never permitted a willful misrepresentation to be made in his store.

"Wait for the wagon and you can ride," said Red. "Boys gone home to get their tools," he said. "I saw you all eating in here, and you looked so jolly that I thought I'd stop on the chance you might be the man I was looking for. Now I'll go right on and see Mr. Demitt and find out what he wants to do in the matter."

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, February 29, 1908.

Rarely has the supreme power of the Speaker of the House, under the Reed rules, been more clearly demonstrated than it promises to be when the Aldrich financial bill goes over to the House. There seems to be little doubt that a very considerable majority of the House earnestly and conscientiously opposes the bill. It is probably true, too, that a considerable majority favors the Fowler measure, which in theory and principle is the antithesis of the Aldrich measure. Despite this situation, however, Mr. Cannon comes over to the Senate at frequent intervals and assures the author of the Senate measure that he need have no anxiety as he, Cannon, will "whip the insurgents into line and make them vote for the Aldrich bill."

Another striking instance of the Speaker's autocracy is to be found in his opposition to Appalachian and the White Mountain forest reserves. There are no Republican votes to speak of in the vicinity of the proposed Appalachian reserve and therefore the Speaker has caused it to be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with a view to preventing any action whatever. For a time Mr. Cannon was rather more favorable to the White Mountain proposition. He has opposed this for years, but recently it has been pointed out to him that it would be impossible to secure any Cannon delegates in New England if he continued his opposition, and he appeared temporarily to relent. Now that it is becoming daily more obvious that there will be no Cannon delegates from New England, anyway, there is resuscitation of the Speaker's opposition.

The Democrats in the Senate are not presenting as forceful an opposition to the Aldrich bill, as they might if they would only get together. As matters now stand, Senators Bailey and Owen, of Oklahoma, stand for a bond secured currency, while a majority of Democratic Senators are opposed to this form of circulation. Of course were the Democrats to present a united front their opposition would be more effective, especially as the Republicans are not a unit in its support. Another radical difference between Democrats is that regarding bank reserves. Senator Johnson has introduced an amendment which will have considerable Democratic support and will doubtless be adopted, providing that national banks must retain two thirds of their reserves in their own vaults but one half of this fraction may be in the securities enumerated in the Aldrich bill. On the other hand, Senator Taliaferro, of Florida, is violently opposed to this measure. Numerous Democrats are in favor of the Nelson amendment guaranteeing all depositors in national banks against loss which is a policy advocated by Mr. Bryan, but on the other hand, Senator Paynter of Kentucky, is earnestly opposed to this provision and will make a speech against it. Were the Democrats solidly for it they could probably attach it to the bill, as they would receive considerable help, from the Republicans.

The outcome of the Brownsville investigation demonstrates to a striking degree the evil resulting from the disfranchisement of the negroes. It is probably a safe assertion that no Senator who heard the evidence against the negro soldiers of the 25th Infantry doubts the guilt of some members of that regiment in connection with the "shooting up" of Brownsville. Only two members of the Military Affairs Committee, Foraker and Bulkley, were willing to vote for the Foraker resolution declaring that the evidence showed that the negroes did not do the shooting. Nevertheless, when it came to saying that the negroes did do it, five Senators, all Republicans, were afraid to express their convictions. They were Foraker, Bulkley, Scott, Hemeway and Du Pont. In the case of Du Pont, he said he was convinced that the shots were fired from rifles which had been issued to the 25th Infantry and which were in the hands of negroes, but was not willing to say it was the negro troopers who did the shooting. But although a large majority of the committee voted for a resolution saying the negro soldiers did do the shooting, Mr. Foraker introduced a bill providing that the discharged soldiers shall all be restored to the army and to their respective rank and shall receive all back pay. Of course the Ohip Senator does not expect such a bill to pass, but he hopes to make political capital with the negroes and incidentally to injure Secretary Taft. The only man who has in anyway profited by the Brownsville investigation, which has cost thousands of dollars, is Senator Foraker who has charged the government with a hotel bill of $6 a day for the three months of the investigation, despite the fact that all that time he was living at his own handsome residence in Washington.

Another evidence of the demoralizing effect of negro suffrage of the Republican party is the violent effort which is being made by Mr. Foraker and others to secure contesting delegations from the Southern states. It is well known that it only takes a box of cigars and a few new one dollar bills to get up a contesting Republican delegation in any Southern state, and yet there is a possibility that the decision of the next Republican National Convention may be dictated by these contesting delegations. Such a situation is deplorable from any standpoint, although there is satisfaction of knowing that such a course by Republicans would unquestionably insure the election of Mr. Bryan.

This is what Hon. Jake Moore, State Warden of Georgia, says of Kodol For Dyspepsia. "E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago Ill.—Dear Sir—I have suffered for more than 20 years from indigestion. About eighteen months ago I had grown so much worse that I could not digest a crust of corn bread and could not retain anything on my stomach. I lost 25 lbs; in fact I made up my mind that I could not live but a short time, when a friend of mine recommended Kodol. I consented to try it to please him and I was better in one day. I now weigh more than I ever did in my life and am in better health than for many years. Kodol did it. I keep a bottle constantly, and write this hoping that humanity will be benefited. Yours very truly, Jake C. Moore, Atlanta, Aug. 10, 1904." Sold by Graham Drug Co.

Suit has been filed in the United States Circuit Court at Guthrie, Oklahoma, asking for an injunction against the railroad companies to restrain them from carrying into effect the "Jim Crow" law. The petition states that it is in violation of the ennobling act which provides that there shall be no distinction in the State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

Kodol is today the best known and most reliable remedy for all disorders of the stomach, such as dyspepsia, heart burn, sour stomach and belching of gas. Kodol contains the same juices found in a healthy stomach. Kodol is pleasant to take. It is guarantee to give relief and is sold here by Graham Drug Co.

The Wisconsin delegation to the national Democratic convention at Denver was, at the closing session of the State convention, at Milwaukee, instructed to vote as a unit for William Jennings Bryan as the Democratic nominee for President, first, last and all the time. The platform containing the instructions was unanimously adopted by the convention by a rising vote. The delegates named by the convention will be voted upon at the coming primary election.
