ROYLEY'S KIDNEY CURE

Fair Means or Foul.

By JANE LEE.
Copyrighted, 1908, by M. M. Cunningham.

There may have been a time when the rain came down in greater quantities, but certainly not within the memory of the shoppers on Broadway one day early in February.

Some few without the saving grace of faith had almost persuaded themselves that a second flood was imminent, while others plodded through the slushy rivers in gutters too wide to be jumped with no feeling save dumb misery.

The wind blew with such velocity that it was impossible to hold an umbrella, and broken ones had been thrown into the gutters, giving the appearance of a fleet of black ships as they whirled and finally stopped at the corner sewer. Women who were forced by circumstances to be out held their skirts with one hand and took a firm grip on their hats with the other.

Among the few stragglers the policeman noticed the figure of a young girl who had passed him several times now peering over the curb as if fascinated by the ebb and flow of the stream.

Her clothes were of a good cut and material. Her curly locks were much bedraggled, and a tiny green stream was running down one cheek, thanks to the combination of rain and green ribbon upon her hat. The man in uniform and brass buttons stepped to her side as she hesitated at a rather perilous crossing.

"Bad day, miss," said he as he offered to help her across the street.

"Bad? I should say it was! And in more ways than one! You see, I have lost my purse, and I am visiting in Bayville. I have not even money enough to get back to the house," explained the girl as she looked up helplessly at the policeman.

He eyed her suspiciously. To his ears such stories were not uncommon.

"That's a good story, all right! Sure it's true, are you?" he said.

Just then the tall figure of a man, with his hat pulled down over his eyes, passed them. The girl brightened as she saw him.

"Oh, call that man, please do," she cried as the tall figure strode on. "He's from Bayville too."

The policeman ran over and touched the man on the shoulder.

"Lady over there wants you, sir." The man glanced back, and then, with one agile leap across the gutter, he was at her side.

"Miss Merrill, can it be you? What on earth are you doing out in this pouring rain?" The questions fell thick and fast and without pause for answer.

"Let us step into this drug store, and do tell me what I can do for you." They entered the store, and a friendly clerk offered them chairs and then politely retired to the rear of the store.

Helen Merrill tried to adjust a stray lock and turned her blue eyes to meet her companion's interested gaze.

"It was awfully good of you to say you knew me. That policeman was horrid, and I thought you'd remember having seen me in Uncle John's trap."

"How could I fail to see you?" mused the man, and the girl blushed as she resumed her story.

"I came in town to do some shopping, and I've lost my purse. It was only snowing this morning, and I could not foresee this awful wind and rain storm. I dropped my purse as I was crossing the street, and though I've looked and looked the whole length of that dirty gutter, I cannot find it," she explained to him. He offered no response. He was apparently lost in studying the depths of the blue eyes before him.

"Oh, won't you send me back home, Mr. Marshall? I know Uncle John will consider it a neighborly courtesy." Clayton Marshall smiled and glanced at his watch.

"I am awfully sorry to hear about your plight, Miss Merrill, and of course I will take you home at once. We have just time to catch the 2:30 train—that is, unless you would rather have a bite to eat first."

"Eat?" she cried. "I feel like a drowned rat and must look like one. No restaurant would admit me. Hungry as I am, I fear that home is the place for me," Helen replied. "But," she continued, "if you will put me on the train it will be quite sufficient. Surely your office is not closed so early."

Marshall protested and finally won the day. He called a hansom, and together they took the train for Bayville. They telephoned in advance, and the family carriage was at the depot to meet Helen.

"Uncle John can thank you better than I," she said as they parted. "Think what a relief Marshall. And then they both laughed.

The leading papers the next morning contained a large and conspicuous advertisement: "Lost, a gold mesh purse, containing bills, gold pencil and family commutation ticket between Bayville and New York. Liberal reward if returned to Miss Helen Merrill, Bayville, N. C."

Helen Merrill was visiting in one of those richly appointed suburban homes now frequently seen on the outskirts of a large city.

Her Uncle John, a retired stock broker and bachelor, hated town life and lived in Bayville the year round. He loved to have his pretty niece visit him, while she was eager to leave her simple southern home and be his guest for weeks at a time, though her uncle was a vigorous chaperon.

The doorbell rang several times during the day, but the finder of the purse did not appear until late that evening, though Helen listened eagerly for the coveted summons.

About 8 o'clock a maid announced to Miss Merrill that a young man had called, saying he had found a purse and would like to have her identify it. Helen ran down the stairs, delighted at the thought of finding her lost treasure.

In front of the open fire stood Clayton Marshall, warming his hands. He looked at Helen, and she looked at him. "Mr. Marshall," exclaimed Helen, "with the pretty bluish tint that was one of her girlish charms," the maid said there was a man here who had found my purse, but I guess he must be outside."

"Not at all, Miss Merrill. I am the man who has the purse," and he drew forth from the depths of his pocket the missing trinket. Helen's cry of delight did not seem to be contagious, for Marshall assumed rather a depressed air.

"Mr. Marshall, you are surely a fairy prince! Yesterday you seemed like a second Noah escorting me in your modern ark up to my home," said Helen gayly. "Today you come like a Santa Claus, giving me back my purse. How can I ever thank you enough?" she added.

"I want to tell you something, if I may," said Marshall as they seated themselves in comfortable chairs. "I saw you talking to that policeman yesterday long before you saw me," he continued. "Again and again I have asked your precious uncle to introduce me to you, but he always put me off, saying, 'What a while, young man; wait a while.'"

"I got so I hated the sight of him more and more, and I determined to meet you in some other way, but no opportunity seemed to come until yesterday. As I was about to cross Broadway I saw this mass of shining gold whirling past me, and as I stopped to pick it up I heard you talking to the policeman. I went on, slipping the purse in my pocket, feeling quite sure that you would call me back. You did, and, well—you know the rest!"

"Such a deceitful man!" mused Helen. "And all the time that I was catching pneumonia you had that purse in your pocket. Oh, how could you?"

"That is just what's bothering me," said Marshall. "How could I? But his eyes twinkled. 'But if you were very, very much in love with a man and wanted to know him would you hesitate to steal a purse in order to accomplish that end? Now, honest,' he pleaded as he drew his chair to a more confidential angle.

Helen Merrill's eyes began to dance. "Men are such stupid, simple minded creatures!" she began. "Imagine asking a woman for an honest answer! Why, the thing is almost absurd. Yet I'm going to be honest, but mind you, only just this once," she said as she leaned forward, almost whispering.

"Just this once," said Marshall, and the space between them was shortened by several inches.

"I could have got home yesterday without your help," she confided. "All I had to do was to go across the street to the First National bank and write my check. But I saw you coming, and well, whenever I asked Uncle John why he didn't have you to dinner like some of the other men he'd say, 'Wait a while, young lady; wait a while.' And—and I thought I had waited long enough—and you know the rest."

"Now that we have both been so terribly honest with each other," said Marshall as he rose and stood beside the chair which held the second cup, "suppose we go together to Uncle John and make a clean breast of it to him?"

"Not at all. You know, I only promised to be honest 'just once,' and that would make twice," argued Helen.

"There's luck in odd numbers," said Marshall. "You were honest to me just now. That's once. Let's go and be honest with Uncle John, and that's twice. And then once more I want you to be honest and answer a question. That's three, the odd number."

They were in the hall by this time on the way to the library and Uncle John. Marshall leaned very close to her as he asked her the third. No one ever heard it save Helen, but after that it really did not matter what Uncle John said.

The Loves of a Violinist.

"A violinist," said M. Ysaye, "can love as many ladies as a soldier can love wives, and more. I should like a violin harem—a regular seraglio of fiddlers—Strada, Guadagnini, a Guarnerius or two, a few Amatis and even a few Gaglianos." Once early in his career he was passionately attracted by an alleged Guadagnini in a pawnbroker's window in Hamburg. Buying it was out of the question, and the pawnbroker, after such persuasions, only consented to lay aside the instrument for awhile. Even then possession seemed remote until Ysaye, meeting a diamond dealing friend, actually freed him with so much enthusiasm for fiddles that he consented to leave a bag of stones with the pawnbroker as security for the instrument. "In this way," said Ysaye, "I was married to my first love among the fiddles, my beautiful Guadagnini!"—Fall Mall Gazette.

Kites and Kites.

"Mr. Plunkett, a famous Irish barrister, had great wit. Before Lord Chancellor of Ireland Redesdale Plunkett had occasion to use the word 'kites' very frequently as designating fraudulent and promissory notes."

"I don't quite understand your meaning, Mr. Plunkett," said the lord chancellor. "In England kites are paper playthings used by boys. In Ireland they seem to mean some species of monetary transaction."

"There is another difference, my lord," Mr. Plunkett replied. "In England the wind raises the kite; in Ireland the kites raise the wind."

Abelard and Heloise.

Abelard was noted as much for her intellectual ability as for her personal beauty. She was familiar with the literature of four or five languages—Italian, French, Greek, Latin and Hebrew. Her knowledge was remarkable; her conversational powers were brilliant. It was her bright mind and varied learning that first attracted the attention of Abelard. Abelard died in 1142, Heloise in 1164. First buried at St. Marcel, Abelard's remains were shifted several times, but finally reached the well known tomb at Fontevault, where also rest the ashes of Heloise.
