"I had been troubled, a little, for nearly 7 years," writes Mrs. L. Fincher, in a letter from Peavy, Ala., "but I was not taken down, until March, when I went to bed and had to have a doctor. He did all he could for me, but I got no better. I hurt all over, and I could not rest. At last, I tried Cardui, and soon I began to improve. Now I am in very good health, and able to do all my housework."

TAKE CARDUI The Woman's Tonic

You may wonder why Cardui is so successful, after other remedies have failed. The answer is that Cardui is successful, because it is composed of scientific ingredients, that act curatively on the womanly system. It is a medicine for women, and for women only. It builds, strengthens, and restores weak and ailing women, to health and happiness.

If you suffer like Mrs. Fincher did, take Cardui. It will surely do for you, what it did for her. At all druggists.

NOT LONG TO WAIT.

Circus Day Not Far Off And The Kids Are Planning A Big Holiday.

Saturday, April 13th, Sparks World's Famous Shows will hold forth in Burlington for a matinee and night exhibition, and the rare, unique and wonderful things that have been promised on paper will become a reality.

The airy riders who, in diaphanous skirts have been pinwheeling on the expansive backs of beautiful and speedy circus horses (on the bill boards) to be seen in all the gorgeousness of tulle and seductive smile; the elephants will copy their pictured acts of comedy and go them one better; the contortionist will proceed to disentangle himself from the knots he tied in his responsive body last year; the acrobatic families will turn dizzy somersaults and the clowns will work off their latest comedy stunts to the great delight of the crowds present—we all like the clowns.

There is nothing on earth like the circus. It is the people's show par excellence. It is the one great American amusement that appeals to all the people. The expert knows what is coming every minute of the show, but he wouldn't have it changed for worlds. The very conventionalism of most of the performance is what makes it so delightful.

The merit in a big circus like the Sparks Shows is in the fact that everything in the show is the very best of its kind. There must inevitably be riding acts, but the riders are the leaders of their profession. There must be acrobats, but the acrobatic artists and aerialists are gathered from the wide world, and are the best that money can procure.

It is this superiority in the quality of the performers that makes the Sparks Shows such a welcome visitor.

The Younger Brother

By CORA HATHORNE SYKES

During that period when the argonauts or forty-niners—they are called by both names—were crossing the plains and afterward the mountains on their way to the then new gold diggings in California two young fellows attached themselves to a wagon train leaving St. Joseph, Mo. They were known as Jack and Joe Laraway and were understood to be brothers. Jack was the stronger of the two, both physically and mentally. He led his brother in everything and when this was commented upon said that he was the elder of the two and a younger brother usually grows up to rely on the elder. At any rate, Joe Laraway did not count for much among the men of the expedition of the women either, for that matter.

In those days the Indians infested the plains, and every man in a wagon train, in case of an attack, was expected to do his duty. The train to which the Laraway brothers were attached consisted of but three wagons, and there were but a dozen men to protect about as many women and children. On the plains outriders flanked the party as vedettes, and at night wagons and mules were arranged as a corral. One day when passing over rolling ground Joe Laraway was one of the vedettes. Suddenly he came galloping in, reporting that while riding up to a rise in the ground an Indian face had appeared above the crest. What Joe spoke of the painted visage of the redskin he turned white as a sheet.

A good deal of contempt was expressed for the young man for his cowardice. His brother took him apart from the others, and the two were seen to talk together. Jack very evidently trying to infuse courage into Joe, while Joe appeared very much excited. That night till 12 o'clock one-half the men in the party stood guard, expecting an attack, the rest sleeping on their rifles. Jack Laraway when the watch was changed offered to stand in his brother's place, and Joe permitted him to do so.

The Indians failed to show themselves, and the next morning the march was resumed without interruption. Joe Laraway from that time was very much in disfavor with both the men and the women of the party. Jack excused his brother on the ground that he had been a sickly child and while growing to manhood had not been able to indulge in those sports that made boys so delight in. He was consequently not prepared for the sterner realities that a man is expected to encounter, and the sight of a savage in war paint is enough to make any man quail who has not been accustomed to any kind of fighting. But Jack's excuse made very little impression. His brother was evidently not made of that stern stuff men expect and women admire in a man.

But what respect was denied Joe was lavished on Jack. This was due to the fact that he was a very handy fellow and was so indulgent to his younger brother. He was just as considerate to Joe as he had been before the latter had shown the white feather. Indeed, so kindly disposed were the party to Jack that whenever he was near they always treated him as if he were a man.

One day Jack Laraway asked that his brother might occupy one of the wagons alone. He claimed that his brother had an affliction that rendered him unfit to perform the duties required and he (Jack) would perform them for him.

When all was completed Joe got into the wagon and while on the journey did not leave it. His brother gave him all the attention he required, and it was well he did, for he might have died before any of the rest of the party would have taken him a crust of bread. The train lumbered slowly across the plains, then more slowly across the mountains. It required months to make a journey that is now made in a few days, and since there were many delays in this case, nearly half a year elapsed between the starting from the Missouri river till the arrival at San Francisco.

Curiously finally got the better of the party to know what was the matter with Joe Laraway, for he was not seen after he took to the wagon. One of the women offered to go in and minister to the young man, but Jack said that his brother was getting on very well and preferred not to see any one except himself. But one night a little cry came from the schooner that electrified the camp. It sounded like something between a penny trumpet and a young rooster giving his first crow.

"He's got the croup!" exclaimed one. "There it is again—listen!" said another. "My good gracious!" exclaimed a mother of three children. "It's a baby's cry!"

The secret was out. John and Joseph Laraway, a newly married couple, had determined to go to California. Thinking they could get on better if Joe passed as a man, he had put on man's clothes and they had given out that they were brothers.
