Wheat Selection for Improving Both Yield and Quality.

Let any farmer walk through his field of wheat, and he will find that all the heads are not alike, even if sown from the best standard varieties of seed wheat. He will find that some heads are longer than others, some broader, some with more grains to the head, and some tighter in the chaff, and so on. It has recently become fully known that most of these variations, unless they are directly induced by a patch of richer soil, are strictly and fully inheritable and are transmitted to their progeny in full vigor and perfection. If farmers who are specially interested in improving the yields and quality of their wheats will go through their fields at harvest time, and pick out the best heads from their fields, and thresh and save them for stock seed, they will find that it will result in a considerable improvement in the yield, quality and uniformity of the crop produced another season. Even if the farmer only picks out enough heads to make a bushel to a bushel and a half of select seed, this will give him enough to sow an acre of wheat for the next season, and that will produce a superior grade of seed. The product of this should give him sufficient seed to give him a good start towards his full seeding for the following year.

We are following out this method of selection on our own farms, and we hope by this means to eventually increase the yield of different varieties of wheat which we offer, materially; but farmers can accomplish very generally the same results for themselves, if they will follow out the practice as above indicated, and increased yields per acre of all wheats sown can very soon come to be realized, provided this method is generally practiced in the saving and selection of seed wheat.—Wood's Crop Special published by T. W. Wood & Sons, Seedmen, Richmond, Va.

THE BEST TYPES OF SHADE TREES

Opinions From Experts In Ten Representative Cities.

NORWAY MAPLE HEADS LIST.

A Thorough Knowledge of Local Conditions is Essential in Making the Choice—American Elm and Red Oak Next in Line.

"If you were asked to select the six species of trees best adapted for planting in the residential streets of your city, what species would you choose, and why?"

A table has been compiled from replies received from ten representative city foresters and shade tree commissioners to the above question, submitted to them by the editor of the American City.

As each forester was given six votes, a total of sixty choices was recorded, the highest possible number of votes for any one species of tree being ten.

ELMS IN EAST ORANGE, N. J.

Irrespective of the order of choice, the highest total number of votes went to the Norway maple, with nine-counts to its credit. The second on the list is the American elm, with seven votes, and the red oak follows with six.

Considered from the point of view of the combined number of first and second choices recorded in their favor, the three trees most highly regarded by this jury of experts are the Oriental plane, Norway maple and American elm, each of which received four such votes. Taking the first choice votes alone, the American elm heads the list with four counts and the Oriental plane with three. The largest number of second selections went to the Norway maple with three and the sugar maple with two second choice votes.

The ten foresters whose cooperation has made possible the compilation of this article are the following:

Brooklyn.—J. J. Levison, master of forestry.
Buffalo.—H. B. Eiler, city forester.
Cleveland.—George Rettig, landscape architect.
Chicago.—J. H. Frost, city forester.
East Orange, N. J.—William Solotaroff, superintendent shade tree commission.
Grand Rapids, Mich.—Hugh B. Lynch, city forester.
New Orleans.—E. Baker, superintendent parking commission.
St. Louis.—Julius Koenig, city forester.
Washington.—Truman Lanham, superintendent trees and parks commission.
West Newton, Mass.—Charles I. Bucknam, forest commissioner.

It should be made clear that each of these men was asked for an expression of opinion as to the best species of trees for his own city and that their recommendations should not be regarded as applying to cities having marked differences in soil, climate and other conditions affecting the growth and life of shade trees. Many trees which give excellent satisfaction in New Orleans, for example, would be of little or no value in St. Louis or Buffalo. Every municipality should, of course, have a really capable shade tree commission or city forester, trained by observation and experience to solve problems as they arise and to make selections according to the several conditions it encounters without undue regard to what may be considered best elsewhere.

This beautiful effects made possible by the proper planting of one species of tree on a street are shown in the accompanying illustrations.

MAPLES IN A SUBURBAN TOWN.

In a debate at the Wichita high school women suffrage was under discussion. "It would be unwise to give woman the ballot," declared a budding Daniel Webster in attacking the proposition. "Woman could not be relied upon to exercise good judgment in voting. She changes her mind far too often." The next speaker was a young woman. She arose and cast a pitying glance at her opponent. "I would like to ask my honorable opponent," she cooed sweetly, "if he ever tried to change a woman's mind once it was made up?" The young woman got the decision.—Kansas City Star.
