I used it about one week, before I saw much change. Now, the severe pain, that had been in my side for years, has gone, and I don't suffer at all. I am feeling better than in a long time, and cannot speak too highly of Cardul."

While sitting in the passenger station at Greensboro Monday afternoon a week, Mrs. Will Hicks, alias Grace Stiley, attempted suicide by drinking carbolic acid. She is expected to recover. The woman formerly lived at High Point, had separated from her husband resuming her former name—Grace Stiley. W. R. Sizemore was with her at the time, and it came out that the two had been living together in Virginia and Sizemore's purpose to leave the woman was the cause of her act. Sizemore was detained by the police but was released on the woman's statement that he was unaware of her purpose to commit suicide.

MAKING THE LITTLE FARM PAY

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

I SHOULD like to make it clear to farmers in general, but more particularly to owners of small tracts of land, that the fruit interest is shamefully neglected in a number of states. It seems like throwing away money. No branch of farming is easier or more profitable than fruit raising. It is a feature that belongs especially to the little farm, but I wish to ask some of the grain growers of the country if they have ever compared the acreage value of corn or wheat with that of apples.

If they have not taken the trouble to do so it would be well to give the subject a little attention. Fruit cannot take the place of grain, but it can add great deal to the farmer's income without interfering with his general work. On a tract of twenty to forty acres there ought to be five acres of large fruit. Apples pay best of all. The crop is quite reliable, and prices almost invariably are sufficient to return a satisfactory profit. With quotations as high as they are for several years the orchardist can stand a partial failure now and again.

Two men will do the necessary pruning in a five-acre orchard in one week every fall and the spraying in one week in the spring. The picking is usually done by the buyers. They know how to classify and pack better than the farmer does. Before severe frosts set in the owner should give a couple of days to maintaining the orchard in the time of the year that is trifling compared to that required in raising a crop of grain. In an average season five acres of fruit will return a profit of from $1,000 to $2,000.

In northern latitudes spring planting of trees is best. Any one who is lacking in experience should not plant more than an acre, or about 100 trees, in a season. Two-year-old trees cost

WORTH MORE THAN CROPS. Why Fields Wash. Because of the lack of humus, the washing and the running off of the water carries off the top soil. There are parts of America in which fields are worn out not because crops have exhausted the fertility, but because the fertile surface soil has been carried off by washing. Humus acts as a binder.

WHEN YOU MARKET BEEF. Some of the Things the Stock Raiser Ought to Bear in Mind. Every farmer who feeds or handles cattle for the market should take some reliable daily farm paper, which has a good complete market report, and keep posted on the market. He ought to know the type of cattle he has and in what class they belong, so that he can intelligently interpret the market reports. He should also know at what time of the year his cattle are most in demand.

From a study of monthly prices of the Chicago market over a period extending from 1800 to 1900 G. H. Dancy drew the following conclusions: Of the various grades of beef cattle prime steers fluctuate the least and Handy Box for Seed Corn. [From the Iowa Homestead.] A seed box that is made and is used and finds it to be very convenient to take off the wagon box and put on. All that is needed are one buggy tire and six nails to nail iron to the seed box for any ordinary sized box holding a sack of corn. The iron must be nailed on the box, and then the box can be lifted off and set away while using the wagon for other work in stead of wiring it or nailing to the wagon box.

Clucks and Crows. When fattening an old hen or any fowl that is apt to be tough feed it on bread soaked in vinegar for about six days before killing, and the meat will be tender. Laying hens should be fed liberally during cold days, for they need not only the usual quantity of feed but also an extra supply to counteract the effects of the cold.

It is more essential that the poultry house be cleaned out often in the winter than in summer, for during cold weather the house is shut up and the gases are confined, thus increasing the danger from disease. Keep on culling. If there is but a single bird in the flock that is not needed set rid of it. The man who will weed out the dross and keep only the workers is the man who is following good business principles.

Driving a wedge with the back of the ax has spoiled many a good tool. Take a nail or beetle to do that work and save the ax for its own work. Clean up and burn all rubbish that would furnish a harboring place for insects and mice. This is especially important with hotbeds and frames. The collar is not the best place to keep pumpkins in winter. They are apt to rot there. Put them upstairs and see that they are used before they begin to decay.

One thing to study in the winter is how to keep your land from being washed away by the storms. This hurts land more than all the crops you ever will take from your farm. One good method is to keep washing land well seeded down.—Farm Journal.

THE BACK LOT SQUABBERY. That high price of living not only affects the wallet, but has transformed many back yards. Many a croquet ground is now a garden, many a tennis court is now a potato patch, many a woodshed is a hen coop, and many a stable has become a squabbery. And, talking of eats, there's nothing more delightful than a juicy potpie made of big breasted home grown squabs. More families should raise them for the home table, and, then, it's such an interesting way to keep the boys busy and help them to start a bank account, for good squabs always sell well. For success there must be good, active working Hens, clean, comfortable quarters, rational feeding and no fads. A successful squabber near us keeps 100 Hens in an upper room 12 by 20 feet, with an overhead outside of ten feet long, six feet wide and four feet high. The house pictured has double floor and is a dandy. Nests should be built in movable batteries, bottoms to slide out for cleaning, with earthenware nipples to hold tobacco stem nests and eggs. The house should be kept free from vermin with whitewash, and floors should be scraped once a week. A bathtub is necessary for the daily dip, and water, grit, shell, a cake of rock salt and nesting material should be kept before them. High priced feeds should be tabooed. The following homemade mixture is fine for health and quick growth: Pound: Old cracked corn..... 20 Oat meal..... 20 Kaffir corn..... 20 Canada peas..... 5 Feed twice a day, leaving enough on the floor so parents with squabs will have plenty for themselves and babies all day.

LET THERE BE NO WASTE! Get away from the one crop system. You exhaust your soil and you return little to it by one crop. Rotate your crops: If you cannot do any better let your land lie fallow. In June or July, if possible, sow a cover crop of clover or alfalfa. This will restore to the soil the fertility that has been exhausted. Cultivate corn more; cultivate soy and oats; cultivate cowpeas and peanuts; cultivate alfalfa and clover and utilize all the products of the farm. Let there be no such thing as waste of by-products.—Home and Farm.

Prepare for the Young Pigs. Know the date when your sows are due to farrow, set it down as something important, then be on the ground on that date, not to fuss and cause disturbance, but quietly to watch and right things if anything needs righting. You may save more money indirectly through this watchfulness than by any other thing in dealing with hogs.

Advantages of Connecting Colony Poultry Houses. By the use of the connecting collar shown in the cut two or more poultry colony houses can be brought together and used for the winter quarters of a flock of thirty-five or more fowls. When used in two or in three an overflow summer house can be connected and used as the feeding and scratching shed. If a third house is used in the series it can be fitted as a laying or a dusting pen. In this way the fowls can be kept in larger flocks, with greater liberty to the individual. Labor is also greatly reduced, inasmuch as only one house instead of two or three need be visited when feeding, etc. Furthermore, by virtue of the larger number nesting in one pen it will be impracticably warm. This connection could be made by a covered wooden passageway as well as by the galvanized iron collar, as shown in the cut. This collar, however, has a shoulder which aids in keeping out wind and water. The connection should be about three inches above the floor and at least ten inches high and ten inches wide or ten inches in diameter. A sliding trapdoor placed on the inside of the house will confine the fowls in the house when desired and when the houses are disconnected for summer use. Chickens should not be moved from one brooder to another or handled or mixed up if it can possibly be avoided.—Bulletin Department of Poultry Husbandry, New York State College of Agriculture.

LESSONS FROM FRENCHMEN.

Some Methods by Which They Grow Double Our Wheat Yield. In France wheat farming is always combined with some other branches of agriculture, such as sheep raising or the growing of beets, and often the three go together successfully. In America we are accustomed to think that in order to raise wheat successfully one must plant hundreds of acres and devote his entire time to this crop. The statement that it doesn't pay to raise wheat on the small farms in the east is often heard, but it without foundation. The average wheat crop in the west on the farms devoted exclusively to that crop, is about fifteen bushels an acre; in France, where wheat is grown in rotation with other crops, the average is about thirty-five bushels. The wheat farm that the writer visited comprises a thousand acres and is situated on a level plateau, from which on clear days the spires of Paris may be seen. On the afternoon of the writer's visit the men were all busy planting wheat and gathering beets. Beyond the harvesters were three sets of two furrow plows working, each drawn by six white oxen. The plows, which were of the two furrow reversible type, were built with a pair of wheels in front to lighten the draft and with four plows keyed in pairs to two parallel steel beams, which were fastened to the axle of the wheels by a ball and socket joint. Each pair of plows was placed one over the other so that when one was in the furrow the mate was upended down in the air directly over it. At the end of the furrow the plowman by means of a large tread each beam half round, throwing the plow with moldboard on the right hand side into the air and bringing the left hand moldboard into the furrow. The plowmen were followed by three teams of oxen that harrowed the field, and these were followed by two grain drills. To a stranger it was a novelty to see all these operations taking place at the same time.—Country Gentleman.

Effect of Dehorning a Bull. It is a somewhat debatable question whether dehorning a bull injures his character so that it will have any effect upon his breeding power. Some observers and careful breeders rather favor the opinion that dehorning a bull takes away from him certain traits or at least modifies them to such an extent that his breeding powers are more or less impaired. Others cannot see that dehorning has any influence upon the breeding power of a bull. The operation is by no means dangerous, especially if done after the fly season.—Hoard's Dairyman.
