GRAHAM, N. C., April 10, 1913.

In his address at the opening of the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association in Washington Tuesday Mr. W. A. Erwin of Durham, president of the Association, said: "The downward revision of the tariff is contemplated by some of the members of our Association with the greatest apprehension." While the tariff is sure to be revised, and it surely needs it, there are wise and conservative states, men in Congress enough to prevent such radical changes all at once as would upset and demoralize business.

President Wilson's appearance before Congress in person to read his message Tuesday to the extrardinary session was the first time President had done the like in an hundred years. The message is brief and couched in easy flowing terms. It deals with the question of the tariff and it urges Congress to keep the party pledg-es made in last Fall's campaign. It advises against reckless haste and radical changes.
