Red Fox Saves His Brush. Red Fox showed his teeth in a grin as he entered his burrow. He had had no adventures worthy of the name that afternoon...

Life was nothing without the spice of adventure. They say a fox loves the hunt as much as the men, the hounds, and the horses. Red Fox was hunted three times a week...

When night came he slunk out and was soon going at full gallop across the fields. The house that he had inspected had a new chicken yard. It was the work of a moment for Red Fox to leap from a bough to the coop...

Now the chase was on in earnest. Red Fox put forth all his speed, since cunning was no longer serviceable. He could still gain on the hounds, all except a few of the older ones...

Glance back over his shoulder, Red Fox saw that of all his hounds, only two were near him. One carried a man in a red hunting coat, the other a woman. They were galloping side by side...

He was frightened for almost the first time in his life. He began to dodge and double. Suddenly he remembered that the little stream which he had passed earlier that morning wound its course not half a mile distant...

They were not fifty paces away when he dashed into the brush. He rolled the brook wider here, and afforded him the supreme opportunity that he required. He sprang into the water and swam hard up stream...

At he swam between the overhanging branches of the leafy bushes that fringed the stream he heard the baying hounds burst into the air. He heard the leader's bay change into a whine and knew that his pursuers were at fault...

The ground sloped sharply toward the brook. Red Fox, still swimming, saw the two horses stop on the verge. The man pulled back his animal, but the girl's horse, slipping on the wet bank, fell over, pinning her beneath its body...

Instantly the man leaped to the ground and holding the reins round his arm, bent over the other. "Murriel! Are you hurt? Are you hurt dear?" he asked in anxious tones...

But the girl did not answer him. The horse had fallen upon her arm and shoulder, bruising them badly. She had fainted from the pain. The man knelt at her side. He sprang to his feet again, filled his hat at the stream, and returning, began sprinkling water into her face...

He had extricated her from under the animal, which now scrambled to its feet and stood looking down upon them. He raised the girl and drew her into his arms...

Textile Education at the A. & M. College.

Cor. of The Gleaner.

A. Textile education is a valuable asset to a young man. During the past year five graduates of the Textile Department of the A. & M. College, Raleigh, have been appointed to responsible positions...

This Textile Department is the Textile School of North Carolina and to make this school representative of the State and throughout up-to-date, the equipment will be considerably increased during the year...

The addition of this machinery will make this Textile school one of the best equipped in America for instruction in cotton manufacturing. The faculty of the Textile Department has been added to by the appointment of Mr. Henry E. Dick as instructor in carding, spinning and knitting...

Head Coach Jack Johnson returned from Columbia this week where he has been spending the summer in studying methods of coaching and gymnasium work and is now putting the gymnasiums, that for the young men and that for the young women, both in order preparatory to the opening. He is also giving attention to getting the baseball, tennis and track grounds in strictly first-class order...

When asked as to the outlook for basketball and baseball next spring Mr. Johnson said that he had never known it to be so bright before. Practically all the old material of both teams will return and many strong new men for each sport have signed up. Johnson also said he expected to get out his material as soon as the College opens for some sport practice, and then he would be able to speak with more authority, though he is absolutely sure that he has the material to put out a winning quint in basketball as well as a highly respectable aggregation in baseball...

Mr. Johnson added that large attention would be given this year to track events and to tennis. Aug. 21, 1915.

Members of the committee on buildings and grounds of the Chicago board of education have adopted a resolution recommending the teaching of swimming in every public school. It is estimated that it will cost the city about $1,000,000 a year to add swimming to the curriculum in every school.

The Du Pont Powder Company has received an order, the largest in the history of the company, for 200,000 pounds of powder for the allies, according to reliable but unconfirmed reports in circulation at Wilmington, Del. The value of the order is estimated at close to $70,000,000.

Constituted authorities in Mexico, Carranza followers, are responsible for the bandit outrages in the lower Rio Grande country, according to the verdict of a committee of prominent citizens, headed by Congressman John H. Dr. E. Detchon's Anti-Diabetic may be worth more to you—more to you than $100 if you have a child who soils the bedding from incontinence of water during sleep. Cures old and young alike. It arrests the trouble at once. $1.00. Sold by Graham Drug Company.

Announcement comes from Germany that a method has been discovered by which that country can get on without cotton for military supplies; that the staple is no longer needed for the manufacture of explosives, etc., and that should England declare cotton contraband the action will not affect Germany in the least.

Recognition by the United States of the government of General Dartignave, elected President of Haiti, by the National Assembly, will not be considered until the new executive has demonstrated his ability to maintain peace and order. Meantime American naval forces under Rear Admiral Caperton will remain in control of the situation on the island.

Not Enough Children. Ever receive the proper balance of food and exercise during the growing period when nature's demands are greater than in mature life. This is shown in so many pale faces, lean bodies, frequent colds, and lack of ambition. For all such children we say with unmistakable earnestness: They need Scott's Emulsion, and need it now. It possesses in concentrated form the food elements to enrich their blood. It changes weakness to strength; it makes them sturdy and strong. No alcohol. Scott & Bowne, Manufacturers, N. Y.

Where South Was First.

Cor. of The Gleaner.

The following facts have been published. Many who knew them have forgotten, and others never knew them. A "cultured woman" recently grouped them for the Nashville Christian Advocate...

A Southern doctor first used chloroform; a southern doctor founded the New York Poly clinic; a Southern doctor (McGuire of Virginia) first proposed that doctors be regarded as non-belligerents, free to serve the wounded on both sides...

The first sewing machine, cotton gin and steamboat belonged to the South; the first railroad to South Carolina, yet Southerners were said to be impractical and unbusiness-like. The first ironclad battleship was a Southern invention and was first used by the Confederates...

The first submarine torpedo boat; the first ironclad batteries, floating and stationary, were built and used in the defense of Charleston harbor. The 11-foot United States flag was first hoisted by brave men of the David who blew up the Hoosatic and were never seen again, their fate not being known until after the war. Would you teach the youths of today finer things?

London is evidently trying to make Hotel Life popular. It is advertising its girl-bell hops. He is indeed an optimist who satiated with this weather can maintain his poise and manage a smile. Possibly "LaPaloma" is more popular out of than in Mexico at present. It does not mean the dove of peace anyway.

Now that the United States Navy has a waiting list, it will hardly do to call naval service unpopular. This country needs a waterproof citizenry. If Mexico does not admit a pacifier soon it will need only an undertaker.

If Lake bathers nowadays do not take along umbrellas they are liable to get wet. Apparently the United States cannot manage to do anything that will please Gen. Carranza. A Bulgarian paraphrase: "Come with Macedonia and we'll help you."

Make amusements are beginning to take themselves accident proof and to advertise the fact. Mexico and Haiti being threatened by famine, are more disposed to welcome American intervention than they were. Mr. Bryan denies that he has any political aspirations. And it is so hard in this damp weather to get salt out of the shakers.

Britain argues that our premises are wrong and so asks us to revise our conclusions. Germany asks us to revise our premises. George W. Perkins is not very optimistic as to the outlook for the progressive party in 1916, but George may not get back his checks from the bank.

Well if the Mexicans should annex Texas, they would have to have thereafter, or Texas would know the reason why. Some girls are relegated to the spinster class on account of their cuteness. If a young man has money to burn it is easy to induce some girl to strike a match.

Are we the feeling with which one woman regards another woman who wears imported gowns. Getting into debt is like dropping from a balloon. Getting out again is like climbing a greasy pole. Amending Tennyson these days to suit these damp times. "Writing me along the ditch." A heart of gold is better than a cheek of brass.

Talk isn't necessarily cheap even when a nickle talks. When jealousy gets busy love, takes a vacation. It's as difficult to pay liabilities as it is to collect assets. Love makes the heart light and the parlor dark.

Another George Lynchings. Balabriga, Ga.—John Riggins, a negro, was lynched by a posse of farmers here. He was accused of assaulting the wife of a tobacco planter. Frye Noted May Face Effect. Washington—On his face dealing with a single case, the importance of which could be measured in a comparatively small number of dollars, the American note to the German Foreign Office in regard to the destruction of the sailing ship William P. Frye by the Prins Eitel Friedrich may have requisite most important in their bearing on the whole question of the treatment of neutral commerce by the European belligerents. The United States acquiesces in the German proposal that a board fix the value.

Red Fox Saves His Brush.

By H. M. EGBERT

Red Fox showed his teeth in a grin as he entered his burrow. He had had no adventures worthy of the name that afternoon, but he meant to have some that evening. That afternoon he had merely slunk through the heather investigating the food supply. Now he curled himself up snugly in his earth and prepared to sleep until nightfall.

Red Fox was a bachelor. He was a monster fox, and one of the oldest of the county. His splendid fur was known to every huntsman over a radius of leagues. He had pitted his wits against the hounds time and again, and always won.

Life was nothing without the spice of adventure. They say a fox loves the hunt as much as the men, the hounds, and the horses. Red Fox was hunted three times a week, and he knew every trick of his trade. Some day, when his strength and speed began to fail him, the inevitable would come. The hounds would tear his slim body, his mask and pads and brush would be out of to adorn some hall. But of that Red Fox knew nothing. He thought that he was immortal.

When night came he slunk out and was soon going at full gallop across the fields. The house that he had inspected had a new chicken yard. It was the work of a moment for Red Fox to leap from a bough to the coop...

Now the chase was on in earnest. Red Fox put forth all his speed, since cunning was no longer serviceable. He could still gain on the hounds, all except a few of the older ones, hardened by years of the chase. Hounds and horses were strung out over the fields behind him, but the old hound still led the remnants of the pack, doggedly and untiringly.

Glance back over his shoulder, Red Fox saw that of all his hounds, only two were near him. One carried a man in a red hunting coat, the other a woman. They were galloping side by side. It seemed to Red Fox that there was a certain hostility between them. Red Fox could scent friendship and enmity in human beings, as well as animals—that was of the essence of his life—and he noticed how, in spite of their nearness to each other, the woman kept her horse's head turned from the man's horse. Red Fox imagined, also, that there was a sort of rivalry between them for his capture.

He was frightened for almost the first time in his life. He began to dodge and double. Suddenly he remembered that the little stream which he had passed earlier that morning wound its course not half a mile distant, in some dense fir patches. If he could make that he might throw the hounds off the scent.

They were not fifty paces away when he dashed into the brush. He rolled the brook wider here, and afforded him the supreme opportunity that he required. He sprang into the water and swam hard up stream, only his whiskered face appearing above the surface.

At he swam between the overhanging branches of the leafy bushes that fringed the stream he heard the baying hounds burst into the air. He heard the leader's bay change into a whine and knew that his pursuers were at fault. Red Fox showed his teeth once more, this time in another laugh. He had baffled them, as the wisest old fox had done so many times before.

The ground sloped sharply toward the brook. Red Fox, still swimming, saw the two horses stop on the verge. The man pulled back his animal, but the girl's horse, slipping on the wet bank, fell over, pinning her beneath its body.

Instantly the man leaped to the ground and holding the reins round his arm, bent over the other. "Murriel! Are you hurt? Are you hurt dear?" he asked in anxious tones.

But the girl did not answer him. The horse had fallen upon her arm and shoulder, bruising them badly. She had fainted from the pain. The man knelt at her side. He sprang to his feet again, filled his hat at the stream, and returning, began sprinkling water into her face.

He had extricated her from under the animal, which now scrambled to its feet and stood looking down upon them. He raised the girl and drew her into his arms.

"I love you forever and ever, dear," he said. She leaned her head upon his shoulder. Their lips met. The man took something from his pocket and slipped it back into his accustomed place. It encircled the girl's finger, and the diamond solitaire sparkled brightly.

Suddenly the girl pointed into the brush. "Look! Look, Arthur!" she exclaimed. "The little rascal I haven't the heart to let the hounds," answered the man. "And Red Fox, still untaken, leaped homeward at an easy gait. Once more he had saved that splendid fur and brush, and with his pads he delicately wiped the water from the mask which was not yet hanging in some huntsman's hall.
