CANNING AND DRYING FOR

How to Utilize all of the Garden's Products to Help Meet the High Cost of Living.

By F. F. Rockwell, Author of "Around the Year in the Garden." "Home V-gretable Gardening," etc., etc. Copyright 1917, by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Seeds Growers, Philadelphia. The biggest source of loss in the average small garden is not in-sects or diseases or dry weather, as bad as these things are, but the waste of products which are not athered in time and go to seed or get too old and tough to use. The abundance of rain which we have had so far in most sec tions has kept the Emergence Gardens planted green and grow-ing, but the hot dry weather we are likely to get for the next few weeks will cause crops to mature very rapidly. Consequently, only the gardener who is prepared will be able to keep up with the sup ply and prevent a great deal of innecessary waste. Even in the garden that has been very carefully planned there is sure to be a surplus of some things. If one has made a big planting of beans or corn especially for winter use, provision is naturally made to take care of them, but it is the small surpluses for which no such provision is made and which go to waste before one realizes it that make a total loss of very considerable amount even in the small garden.

To utilize the garden's product to the fullest extent you should be prepared to save every extra quart of beans or dozen ears of corn that is likely to be produced Two ounces of drid string beans will supply that part of a meal for emption will then be denied. In case they then fail to appear they will be treated as deserters from the army.

Will supply that part of a meal for ounces of dried apples to make a large apple pie. So it is evident that even the odds and ends are well worth saving, and to do this saving with the least possible trouble the apparatus and containers necessary should be kept Improved Canning Methods.

The modern method of canning which is being quite universally adopted everywhere with good re sults and with great saving in work is called the "One Period Cold Pack Method." The vegetables of fruits are put in the jars or cans while they are cool instead of being dipped out of a steaming hot kettle with a certainty of a good deal of hot and disagreeable work and the risk of badly scalded fin gers, if not a telephone call to the nearest doctor.

In the One Period Cold Pack Method there are four genearl rules to be obeyed. They may seem so bvious as to be hardly worth men tioning, but any failure in results can usually be found to be due directly to carelessness in one o these four points. First, each product to se canne should be absolutely sound and perfectly clean; it should also be as fresh as it is possible to get it-preferably gathered the same day that it is to be put up.

Second, the utensils and all the equipment and containers should b not only carefully washed, but thor oughly sterilized before work with each "batch of stuff" is begun.

Third, after being put in the containers, the "processing" should be ontinued the full length of time that is required for the particular product that is being put up-the time required for different things varies greatly and one should be sure of having correct information on this point before beginning work with any fruit or vegetable that has not been handled before.

neth after the "processing" cans or jars been completed the must be made absolutely tight.

The "processing" as mentioned above consists in placing the jaror cans of vegetables or fruit, af-ter the latter have been packed in sterilized, hot containers and covered with boiling liquid, in hot water or steam for a certain length of time before they are finally sealed preparatory to cooling off and putting away. This time varies from 12 minutes to two hours for different kinds of vegetables and fruits where the jars are sterilized in a hot water bath, such as wash boiler with a bottom or tray to keep the jars from coming in di-For Nasty Calomel rect contact with with the metal over the fire, and to facilitate putting them in and out. This new method of drying is, in orief, simply this: Cut up or slice your vegetables or fruits in small pieces so they will dry out readily place them in thin layers in open trays stacked one above another and placed before an electric far which is kept running until they iry out. If the market is flooded with string beans you can get a bushel of them and blow all the water you can out of them at a of ten to twenty cents for electricity. In the winter you put the water into them again by letting them soak over night, and you have fresh string beans.

Some things, like beans are "blanched" before drying by being lowered into boiling water or placed in steam a lew minutes before drying. They should be dried until no water can be pressed out of a freshly broken piece-that is until tough and leathery, but not until crisp and brittle. To be sure of getting each batch evenly dried and sufficiently dried, each batch of dried material should be mixed and "conditioned" by pouring it from one container to another two or three times for the first few days after drying. If too moist it be put back and dried more. The dried products should be kept from the light after drying, otherwise they will lose color.
