Not only was it learned that Germany controlled absolutely the chemical and dye trade, which are so closely allied as to contitute practically one industry, but her tentacles were found in wireless, in metals, in surgical and optical instru

The chemical and dye industry is the key industry to scores of other in-dustries carried on by Americans, so absolutely essential are chemicals and dyes to successful manufacture in nany lines. Its importance can enly be fully appreciated by those who are when the act was passed there was little accurate or definite knowledge of the extent of German investments in the United States. While they were known to be large, they were not gen-erally suspected of being either power-ful or unfriendly to American Interests. Consequently the original measure made the custodian a mere conservator, restricting his powers of dis position of enemy property to cases where it was necessary to make sales in order to prevent waste and to protect the property. If this situation had remained unchanged this country would have found itself in the and alous position of carefully protecting for the enemy the great industrial and commercial army which Germany had planted here with hostile inten More than that, we would have been forced to account at the end of the war for enormous profits made by many of these businesses, profits due almost wholly to the war conditions for which their owners and their own
