Jenning's Opportunities

By JESSIE ERNST

IF YOU had valeted a miserly millionaire eighty-three years old for fifteen years, and he died, and in his will he really left you the five thousand dollars that he promised he would, would you remember the fifteen years of Horace Blount's preparation for the golden reward?

Thus cogitated Alfred Jennings, the inheritor. Folding his newspaper and carefully putting it into his pocket, he placed his hat on his head at a jaunty angle, gave his cane a practiced swing, then left the Blount mansion from the front door.

Jennings walked around the block and paused in front of the "Get It Good and Quick" cafeteria. He went inside. He seated himself at the counter.

"Is Miss Minerva coming in soon?" he asked timidly of a dark stout businesslike woman who was mixing sodas.

"She'd better, or she'll pay me overtime," the woman snapped. "What's the order? There's the helpmate now, thank Gawd; That let's me out!"

Jennings immediately arose, held open the small swinging door as Minerva passed through it.

"Did you read the morning paper?" was his first question.

"Got as far as Beauty Hints," she answered.

"If you will cast your eyes over this it may be of interest to you. Particularly the name of Alfred Jennings."

Minerva soaked in the news surprisingly quick.

"Golly, five thousand! That's a whale! You're going to blow in some of it, ain't you?" she asked anxiously.

"I was thinking of spending a couple of hundred for a nice large diamond engagement ring, and let us say a swell fur coat. I was thinking of a conservative honeymoon to Europe, like a run over to Paris to buy Mrs. Jennings some French dresses. Not bad as a starter, eh?"

"Got your eye on the dame who's to get the inducements?"

"I'll be in tomorrow and tell you more about my plans." He pompously adjusted his necktie, lifted his hat and departed.

Two blocks away was a real estate office. On the door was a small pasteboard card. It read—"Typewriting Done Within." Jennings entered.

The head clerk glared at him. "Miss Brown is very busy; do not detain her too long."

Jennings smiled. He tried to act friendly. "Just a short letter."

At the back of the store sat Miss Brown running a comb through her bobbed hair. She saw Jennings and waved him a welcome.

"Haven't seen you for a week, old doughnuts. Has some one vamped you away from me?"

"Apparently you have not read the newspapers." With which he placed the item containing the news of his fortune in her hands.

"What are you going to do with it, buy yourself a country estate?"

"What is your suggestion?" Jennings asked bashfully.

"A classy automobile would mean something in my life."

"I was thinking of a nice honeymoon abroad first."

"Nix on the foreign situation. See America first for me—" She was about to say quite a bit more on the subject, but the head clerk inconsiderately interrupted with: "A letter for you, Miss Brown—be quick, please."

Once more in the street Jennings stopped in front of a "movie" theater. The girl sitting in the glass booth was reading a paper.

Jennings approached the booth. The girl did not raise her eyes. She just mechanically asked: "Thirty or fifteen?"

"It's me, Miss Hope," Jennings announced.

He handed her the newspaper with great relish.

"Five thousand!" She melted completely. There was a quick fade-out. She turned on him a soft affectionate gaze, one she had never handed him before.

"It ain't my fault I burst out like I just did. I always liked you or you wouldn't be hanging around me the last two months. Say Toodles, I've got a night off tonight, what do you say to some chop suey and a tango?"

Jennings beamed with pleasure. Here, at least, was an offer of the life he longed for! Chop suey and a tango with a "movie" queen.

Jennings' speed back to the Blount mansion was marked. He used his latched key to open the door at the servants' entrance. He closed it back of him, when suddenly a heavy hand descended upon his shoulder.

"Are you Alfred Jennings?" a tall, muscular-looking man asked him.

"Yes," Jennings replied.

"Recognize this picture?" Over twenty years dissolved before his eyes in a second. He had been shown the picture of a woman he married in a distant past, and in order to get rid of her had deserted a perfectly good job as steward on a ship.

"Mary Jennings, your wife, got a divorce from you twenty years ago for desertion. At the time she was awarded five dollars a week alimony, which was never paid. You owe her five thousand and two hundred dollars. I've got a warrant for your arrest. You've got to pay it or go to jail."

"For how long?" asked Jennings weakly.

"Ask the judge."

DO YOU LIKE ONIONS?

"An onion a day keeps the doctor away." Would that there were more lovers of onions, as health goes with them.

Robert Louis Stevenson calls the onion the poetic soul of the salad bowl.

For an all-round vegetable, the onion stands first, being wholesome, purifying, stimulating, antiseptic and prophylactic. Can we name another with such a record?

Those who are weak and feeble, find that the free use of onions gives strength. Our grandmothers knew the prophylactic powers of onion sirup or onion poultice for colds and coughs.

The antiseptic effect of the onion is active in the large intestine where the imperfectly digested food may be stagnating and poisoning the body. The onion disinfects and cleanses the whole system.

To some, perhaps, the fact that indulgence in the crisp deliciousness of the odoriferous bulb bars us from our friends, may be the charm which appeals. To others who eat with discretion as to time and place, there need be no regrets. We only enjoy them ourselves, protest most when we are deprived and others in our company have indulged. Consideration for others should be one of our principles.

For the sake of peace and comfort for all, eat a bit of parsley after onions; it really does help to soften the odor.

Bolled onions do not leave the breath so offensively fragrant as the raw ones, yet the latter are most valuable, and many who are so fond of them, make up their minds that they may as well be disliked for a strong odor as a weak one.

For an onion poultice, to use in congestion, when the lungs are affected, there is no remedy more quickly active than chopped onions, mixed with a little rye flour, and a bit of vinegar. Place on a thin cloth over the throat and lungs, renewing often to keep moist. A few hours of this treatment will help a bad case.

Balancing the Rations.
After our agriculturists discovered how to feed their calves and pigs on a balanced ration to produce the best animal in the shortest time at the least expense, a few dietitians thought the human baby, being more important, could profit by their investigations. Even after years of education by schools of household economics there are comparatively few women who seriously think along these lines. Instinct may be a good guide with some women, but it is not a safe one for the majority, which is painfully shown by the number of sufferers from all sorts of stomach troubles.

There are countless numbers of people in middle life today who are handicapped because of improper feeding in their youth.

Cover well-washed lettuce, parsley and any greens in a deep dish; set in a cool place and it will be fresh and crisp for several days.

The paper bag given you to cover your hat when traveling may be used as a cover for your coat, if you carry a small hanger. Make a slit in the bottom of the bag, slip the hanger with the coat on it through the small opening.

When troubled with car sickness, keep the feet from the floor, resting them on a cushion or seat. It is the vibration which causes the car sickness, they tell us.

In cold weather we desire heat-producing food, such as pork; hearty and richer food those living in a warm climate do not need. The occupation of a person governs his food. The lumberman working in the open will eat of heavy hearty foods and needs them; the desk worker should have easily digested foods and dinner at a time when more time for rest can be given after it. Age and youth need different foods as we know, and those in delicate health need every care given to the food with which they are served. If we keep in mind the three food principles, those which build up tissue and supply waste, called proteins, represented by meats, eggs, milk; the carbohydrates, energy-producing foods, such as sugars, and starches, and the fats, found in butter, nuts and meat, it will not be hard to arrange a balanced diet.

The growing child needs bone and muscle-building food which is found in milk products, eggs and fresh vegetables.

The grown adult, who has surplus fat, should limit the amount of food to twelve or fourteen hundred calories per day. The calorie is a measure of heat. It is the amount used to raise one pound of water four degrees.

The problem of foods, as to quantity and food value, must be worked out by every housewife who has the responsibility of feeding a family.

GAY JUVENILE SWEATERS; TUNIC MODES FROM PARIS

WHEN mother slips the wee little folks' arms into sweater sleeves, no doubt she is thinking "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure"—which sounds very serious and prosaic until one views the sweaters which are designed for this season. Then prose becomes poetry, for they are having a time of glorified color in juvenile sweaterdom this season. Of course if one insists on browns and tans, they are there for the choosing, but what's the use in selecting a dull-toned sweater for little daughter when there are such lovely pinky beiges to be had in the knitted outerwear sections, or bennas with a decided rose tinge.

Little girls' dresses knitted in shell stitch with a flared ruffle below the neckline are designed in effective pastel colorings.
Happy the woman of fashion who adds a French blouse or two to her spring and summer collection. That artful baffling simplicity which is a peculiar gift of the French couturier is bespoken to a degree of extreme chic in each of the blouses portrayed. The model to the left is a Callot inspiration. There is the inimitable artistry of genius in its every detail. Stone gray georgette is the selected medium. Especially is the yoke unique in that it drops sufficiently to suggest cockscorn red and hosts of charming blues?

As to color combinations, the model in the picture is typical of the brilliant trend. This attractive sweater is as suitable for the small boy as it is for his sister. It is knitted in apple-green wool with front in alternating stripes of orange and green. This little sweater happens to be of the button-up type but slipovers are also shown in plentiful number.

Very new and appealing to children are knitted coatees with collars and cuffs of fringed wool. Knitted rayon tunic suits for youngsters have knickerbockers to match. Following the ensemble a shallow decollette, bringing itself back to practical aspect by means of a band of the fabric which defines a conservative neckline. Then, too, the draped hemline, confined on one side under a tasseled medallion motif, suggests an entirely new line of thought.

Many points of interest are accentuated by Jeanne Lanvin in the companion blouse, in that the much heralded epaulet shoulders are featured, also the modish V-neck and particularly the slashed tabs which, while they afford escape from the tyranny of an all-too-narrowness, score a double victory in that they suggest the popular flare tendency. A discreet use of idea, novelty brushed wool caps are designed to match children's cardigans, jerseys and brushed wool knicker suits. In these, also color plays a pleasing part in such combinations as sage, fawn and white; puffy, green and white; applegreen and fawn; orange and yellow.

Brushed wool cardigans in rainbow effects are part of the small folks' knitted outerwear collection.

Fanciful touches on sweaters and knitted tunics for children stress tassels of the wool, with lacings up the front. Novelty sweater types have scalloped collars, and hemline, the same bound with plain knit rayon. The pearl buckle which clasps the knitted belt on the sweater in the picture adds a decorative note in many instances.

embroidery is evidenced on shoulder and tabs of this tunic blouse.

This decorative note is oft repeated on the import blouse. Crepe de chine and georgette serve as background for fine needlework in colored yarns.

Perhaps the outstanding feature in the newer blouses is their extreme length. Sometimes only a few inches of the slip shows below. Jabots, flares, and buttons, also long stifen neckties are tunic headlights.

Flower-patterned prints are favored for the informal tunic, having cascades of white georgette or rippling jabots. Striped tub silk is recommended for the practical blouse, especially to be worn with the smart cloth sailor.

Break Your Chains of Misery

Rheumatism, lumbago, kidney trouble and other such ailments are like chains and shackles that bind you down. They destroy your wage-earning power, make you feel and act years older than you really are, and keep you in misery. And these ailments grow steadily worse. They finally become dangerous.

Yet you can break these chains of misery! Just remember that these ills are caused by impure blood—blood that does not contain enough iron. Without iron, your blood cannot throw the poisons out of your body. Instead, it keeps on gathering and circulating these poisons through your system.

This is why you should begin at once to take Acid Iron Mineral. This amazing iron tonic is Nature's own product. Physicians and scientists have been unable to duplicate it. Unlike any other mineral iron—it is quickly absorbed into your blood, and gives it strength to throw off impurities which cause your bad health. It is positively guaranteed.
