"Constructive Economy" Constructed

Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee and one of the best informed men of the United States on governmental expenditures, has made the following statement:

"When the director of the budget, reviewing the economies of the administration in his annual message published a few days ago, admitted 'there is yet much to be done,' there was an echoing 'Amen' from every student of government and governmental expenditures.

"A statement to the effect that the fiscal year 1926 was another period in which the policy of economy moved forward in encouraging fashion is truly a high-sounding one but it is more truly a trite statement—and a ridiculous one in the face of the facts. While I agree with General Lord, the Director of the Budget, that there is yet much to be done I am afraid to hope—and I am encouraged in this fear by a statement made by the President last winter at a business meeting of government employees. He told them: 'We cannot anticipate further appreciable reduction in the total annual expenditure for the business of government.'

"At the time the President made this speech I said on the floor of the House that I was at a loss to understand just why he chose the words 'further reduction,' pointed out that there has been no reduction whatsoever since he was elevated to his present office, and showing instead that the cost of peace time operation has steadily increased—and this in spite of enormous inevitable reductions brought about by the cessation of war activities and agencies.

"The Director of the budget is a splendid man. I have a warm affection and high regard for him, but I am not unmindful of the fact that he is the direct and personal appointee of the President; that he does not dictate the policies of the administration and it is but natural at this time when Congressional elections are in the offing that he should so heartily commend the policies of his Chief.

"There was appropriated at the last session of Congress for the fiscal year 1927, $4,409,000,000, and this huge sum was considerably less than requested by the president in his budget estimates and message to Congress. The sum is far greater than the appropriation made at any session of Congress since 1921, and in that year the government was spending over a billion dollars more than at the present time on an army and navy which had not yet been demobilized from war strength and $700,000,000 more on the railroad administration. The appropriations for 1927 are $470,000,000 more than they were at the preceding session.

"General Lord says that without the effort of the budget and the President the cost of government would have soared much higher. Congress reduced the estimates of the budget and the President more than six million dollars for 1927 and during the years the budget has been in operation, beginning with 1923, Congress has cut the budget estimates in the aggregate sum of $351,428,912 (a sum almost identical with the amount of reduction carried in the last revenue bill).

"One is sometimes discouraged to see news stories continually carrying statements as to the economies effected by the present Chief Executive, and one often wonders whether the people are really interested in seeing the true picture. But I do not believe it is possible to fool the people for long. This is evidenced now by the fact that we are no longer being lulled by stories of the great reductions in expenditures but are now being assured that the economy of the Chief Executive is 'constructive'—a term which may mean anything and which in this instance is an effort to explain away the increasing cost of the government under this administration.

"The method of Republican leaders in making comparisons of expenditures under this and the former Democratic administration is unfair, and ridiculous. The Harding-Coolidge administration went into office in 1921 on a promise of a regime of economy and there has been an unceasing propaganda to bolster up and make good their promise. But the facts show that their administration has enormously increased expenditures over any preceding period save when the country was at war. The appropriations for the three fiscal years, 1925, 1926 and 1927, after eliminating the increased appropriations made necessary to pay the interest on the public debt and debt retirements, exceed those of the three peace years of the Wilson administration, the fiscal years 1914-5 and 1916, by $4,201,381,000, an average increase of one and one-third billion dollars a year."

Scientific research is the basis of progress. Dr. B. W. Wells of State College has found that cranberries will grow in the great savanna regions of southeastern Carolina.

Tom Tarheel says a salesman wanted him to spend his first tobacco check for a new set of lightning rods but the wife wanted water in the home and she won out.

Cotton farmers in eastern Carolina appear indifferent to outbreaks of boll weevils in their fields, report county agents of the extension service.

Tom Tarheel says he saved lots of money on his poultry last winter by taking out the hens that didn't lay and selling them during the early fall.

Some farmers are finding a thirty-five percent infestation of boll weevil in their cotton fields. It is not yet too late for the weevil to do damage.

Tom Tarheel says that having something to sell from the farm each week has helped him through many a tight place.

HOME, DAD AND THE BOY

By FRANK H. CHELEY

"SIR, AM MEETING MY BOYS EVERY NEED, HE HAS NO NEED OF A PROGRAM"

The Swelled-Headed Dad IN THE vernacular of boydom, he is the wise-guy and, therefore, helpless. He needs no information, suggestions or help from anyone on any subject. He was a boy once himself (cons ago) and he knows all the tricks of the trade. He knows boys like a book, but his son has his number! He is positively, absolutely certain, beyond any shadow of a doubt, that his son is O. K. in every particular; extraordinary, thoroughly well provided for from every angle, and can know no need—for look who his Daddy is! All boy organizations are entirely superfluous and undesirable. All boy gangs are bad. All boy activity a waste of time and money, and quite unnecessary. Yet it is invariably the son of such a Dad who knows more algebra than his mother, more religion than his father and more worldly wisdom than both of them put together, and when he gets into trouble, instead of going to his "wise" parent, he looks up a real man who is still human, understanding and sympathetic. He doesn't understand that building boys is better than mending men.
