It is clear, therefore, says Mr. Every city should have good Shay, that when corn is properly treet lights. When they haven't supplemented and fed to thrifty hogs and charged at market prices on the two farms, the result appears the same on both, while the actual results vary to the extent of $5 per hundred pounds of gain produced. Considering all costs, corn from an acre yielding 40 bushels will return almost five times as much clear profit as that from an acre yielding only 20 bushels, basing the selling price of the hogs at ten cents a pound.

For that reason the man feeding hogs has a double reason for wantany city to cut down street light- ing to make high yields of corn per acre. The goal for the State has been set at 50 bushels per acre this year. With such yields, farmers can well afford to feed more corn to hogs.

Mr. Scott lived close to his farm all the year round; and this application was the big factor in his success.

While pursuing the occupation of a farmer, he was not forgetful of the other sides of life which go to make up the well-rounded, useful citizen.

He was a devout and liberal supporter of his church at old Hawfields. It was rare that his seat was vacant.

He was a community builderfavored and espoused the things which made for the making of his community as desirable place in which to live.

Among his ambitions was the provision of better educational advantages for his community and his county. And he practiced his precepts by giving his sons and daughters the advantage of a college education.
