TO THE FARMERS OF ALAMANCE COUNTY

Nearly one year ago, I was in your county and aided your worthy County Agent in a campaign for better farm pastures, and better dairy cows, pigs and poultry to consume these pastures.

When we closed that campaign, I wondered if our preachments about more and better pastures would be heeded by the farmers, or would it all go by as an idle tale told to disinterested listeners.

I am happy to be back in this good year of 1930 to check up on what results have come to the county through that campaign. We find that the campaign is still forging ahead. Almost every farmer I meet is inquiring for more pasture information, and invitations to go to see pastures which have been built up in Alamance county where a few years ago, the farmers fully believed that pasture grasses and legumes would not grow.

This afternoon, Kerr Scott, the enthusiastic county agent, told me of Mr. J. M. Thomas' success in making a pasture, which sounded rather "fishy," but we drove around to see it and all fishy smell disappeared when we got in sight of this pasture. There was orchard grass, tall meadow grass, Kentucky blue grass, white Dutch clover, Alsike clover and Lespedeza in abundance. I was surprised and delighted. Now some of our county agents have been hauling their farmers all the way through east Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia to see some good pastures. That is all right and good so far as exercise and sight-seeing and recreation are concerned, but for practical pasture building, a visit to Mr. Thomas' farm in Alamance county will beat it to death; because when he sees the good pastures in the states referred to the farmer will naturally say, yes it can be done here; but it can't be done in Alamance county, N. C. But when he visits Mr. Thomas' pasture, growing right up out of Alamance soil, there is no alternative only to admit that it can be done right here in North Carolina.

It is fascinating and instructive to hear Mr. Thomas tell how he procured such success in making these pastures, and yet there is no mystery about it. Any farmer in Alamance county, or any other county in North Carolina can do the

CONTROL FIELD RATS WITH POISONED OATS

Damage to corn and other field crops, especially along ditch banks and near timber, from field rats and small rodents may now be effectively controlled through the use of strychnine coated oats.

"This poison, while not dangerous to gallinaceous fowls such as chickens, turkeys, partridges and the like, is a sure killer for the rats," says C. D. Schwartz, biologist for the extension service at State College. "In preparing the oats, however, care should be taken so that none of the poison is left where it can be reached by other animals or the children.

"About one teaspoonful of the poison should be paced every 20 or 30 feet along the runways and also on both sides of the ditch banks. In fields of broomsedge it feet apart on the runways. Lespedeza to place the bait 15 feet peceza is a favorite food and cover for these small rodents and the crop should be treated as soon as the tops have made a dense cover. A thorough treating of the crop is absolutely necessary in order to control the destructive cotton rats."

Mr. Schwartz states that one application of the poisoned oats is usually sufficient to control the rats but in some cases it is necessary to rebait the runways. This should be done about one month after the first baiting and should be placed at the same distance apart but in a new place along the runway or ditch.

One pound of bait is sufficient to clear about one and one-half acres and can be bought already prepared much cheaper than it can be prepared at home. A letter to C. D. Schwartz, State College Station, Raleigh, N. C., or to your own county agent will bring information as to where the bait can be secured and prices.

The province of Alberta, Canada, will spend $1,200,000 on its main highways this year.

Sixteen cotton demonstrations in Catawba county made an average yield of 545 pounds of lint cotton per acre during the past year at a cost of only nine cent a pound. The average yield for the county is 240 pounds at a cost of 18.3 cents.

Newsy Letter By County Agent Scott.

H. M. Singletary completed first month of accounting work for Alamance Herd Improvement association. Twenty-two herds were tested.

Pasture campaign making splendid progress. It costs four cents per day to feed a cow on improved pastures, as against 35 cents per day for roughage out of a barn loft. Thoughtful farmers are quick to see this.

Mebane Kiwanis club plans to give another barbecue to those who sow improved pastures.

Many farmers sowed lespedeza on recent snow. It is a splendid soil improving and grazing legume. Seed cost less than for clover seed.

It is a mighty fine feeling on these snowy mornings to have a small check coming in for milk, cream or eggs, to back up what the cotton or tobacco crop did not do.

Taking an extra cake of sausage on your plate these brisk mornings is all right, if you raised it yourself. A fine feeling isn't it? Plan a good garden, then grow it. Profits count faster when expense of living are less.

We are making our cooperative order of grass, clover and lespedeza seed on February 15.

Farmers in recent county-wide meeting, stated that the county agent should make improved pasture the important project for 1930. You are invited to join in $3000 acre campaign for improved pastures.

Scores of farmers are having tobacco seed cleaned and treated at county agent office. Bring yours any day.

W. KERR SCOTT,
County Agent.

same thing—provided he will do what Mr. Thomas did. He simply made up his mind that he wanted a pasture. He then sought the necessary information needed—he then followed this information, and he has the pasture.

With the proper management this pasture will easily carry two cows per acre. Now listen, I said, with proper pasture management, because with bad pasture management, this young pasture could be made a failure, but that is another tale about a good pasture.

Respectfully,
J. R. SAMS,
County Agent at Large.

NEED HOG AND HOMINY IN EASTERN SECTION

Hogs and corn, milk and hay are the great needs of southeastern North Carolina farmers according to a survey recently made by extension workers at State College.

Pork is needed not so much because it is not produced in sufficient quantity but because more of it is needed to substitute for beef and mutton which are not produced in anything like sufficient amounts. Corn of course is needed to feed the hogs, and the production of this crop is generally below requirements for the section.

Only a fraction of the required amount of milk is produced and the failure of this supply is doubtless one of the causes of the wide spread of the dreaded pellagra in the southeastern section. The survey, however, shows a distinct boom in milk production with every county in the southeast showing a 100 per cent increase in 1928 over the production in 1929. Hay, which is needed for feeding purposes, is not raised in anything approaching needed requirements and millions of dollars are spent annually for this commodity which could be produced at home.

There is a silver lining, however, as the section raised a surplus of Irish potatoes and practically all the sweet potatoes needed. Poultry and eggs are also being produced in sufficient quantities to fill home requirements and some of the counties are producing a surplus. The farmers are not growing enough oats but production has shown a steady increase since 1920.

The trend in money crops has been towards tobacco and away from cotton, especially in those counties along the southern edge and along the coast. Here the boll weevil has done great damage and farmers are turning to other crops.

Two hundred and twenty-one boys and girls of Davidson county have enrolled for Four-H club work. Poultry, corn calves and pigs are the major projects for the boys, while the girls are studying nutrition and clothing for health.

MORE LIVESTOCK NEEDED ON FARMS

A growing demand for more milk, better milk, butter, beef and poultry makes it absolutely necessary that farmers in North Carolina increase their livestock production if they continue to "live at home."

"The rapidly increasing urban population has brought to the farm door the opportunity of buying those things that at one time were of necessity produced on the farm" says A. C. Kimrey, dairy extension specialist at State College, "but it is also increasing the demand for all kinds of livestock products. In neglecting to increase his dairy herd and poultry flock the farmer is neglecting a wonderful opportunity to not only produce a good living but also make a good income from the farm."

In the early days of our history, states Mr. Kimrey, when the markets were few and far apart, it was not only good business but a necessity to produce everything needed on the farm. This naturally led to the production of crops that were adapted to slow marketing such as cotton, tobacco and grain. But now he states, it is not only necessary to produce the things needed on the farm but also to produce those things most in demand at the nearest market which, in most cases is at the front door. The constant demand today is for food products from livestock.

According to Mr. Kimrey, livestock, pasture and feed crops in reasonable proportions will enable every farmer in North Carolina to utilize a maximum per cent of his acreage and will at the same time produce a decent living and a marketable surplus of livestock products.

"This is the only permanent solution and as long as the farmers of North Carolina refuse to follow this system, just so long will they have a small and insufficient farm income and a standard of living not in keeping with other livestock producing sections," says Mr. Kimrey.
