Graham 50 Years Ago.

"Lest we forget," in regard to the information about the burning on March 23, 1875, of the Capt. Graham home furnished by Mr. Edgar Long. This was tradition—Edgar had remembered the date and circumstances detailed to him. Prior to that event, yet very young, he had lived in Graham and his home is here now.

Next was "Aunt Mandy" Tinnin's lot, covering the frontage from the former Jas. H. Holt line to a point a short distance above the M. E. church (on the opposite side of the street).

We have not examined the records to see if the fact is disclosed, but our recollection is that John W. Flanigan, a resident of Graham before and after the 50-year period, at times a merchant, said in our presence that he had bought this lot, or a portion of it, from a colored person and that the consideration was a calico dress. Mr. Flanigan was a keen trader and we are not doubting the purchase and the consideration.

Aunt Mandy's home was opposite the aforesaid church—just a coop with three or four small rooms. It was hardly large enough to shelter this big-hearted, unselfish old mammy. She is kindly remembered by all who knew her. She passed on many years ago, but gave the property to her daughter, Adeline, who was much the same warm and wool of her mother. She, too passed on at an advanced age almost a score of years ago.

At the South-west corner Aunt Mandy sold a lot to Dr. P. H. Fleming, upon which he built a home and in which he lived a number of years. It is now owned by J. V. Pomeroy and is next to the home of his sister, Mrs. J. Harvey White.

Later, around 30 years ago, she sold a lot to Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Montgomery, next to the Fleming lot, and they built a home which is owned and occupied by Mrs. Montgomery. Mr. Montgomery passed on a few years ago.

When Adeline Tinnin died the remainder of the lot was sold and divided among her next-of-kin. The humble home of aunt Mandy and Adeline has been torn down and moved away.

Here we come to a street. No street there until property was opened up eastward.

North of this street—a grand lot, was the home of W. G. Wilson (Bill), colored, with a frontage of about 300 feet. Wilson's home was a two-room house and later he built another about the same size, at right angles to the older house. There was a fine well of water in the front yard.

Bill was a tinner by trade and a good one. He was making a good living and some besides. He was always polite and respectful—never failed to tip his hat to his white friends. He did not make money as fast as he wished, it seemed, and he engaged in distilling. After that he did not appear to advance financially. He died some 20 years ago. His widow was highly respected. She died some ten years ago. His mother, "Aunt" Margaret, an industrious old soul, lived with Bill and Evvy. She, too, is dead.

Evvy built a home a short distance to the eastward and sold the home place.

On the frontage now there are three excellent homes: That of Mrs. W. H. Holt (Mr. Holt died here around four years ago) partly on the site of Wildon's old home; next is the home of Allen D. Tate and family—the home built by the late Dr. J. J. Barefoot about the close of the World War and where he lived with his family till his death about ten years ago; and next the home of Ben M. Rogers, built some three years ago.
