RECOVERY SIGN

The advance in the price of high grade bonds on Wall Street to the highest level in six years the traders regard as an outstanding indication of recovery, and this in addition to a bright outlook.

Wall Street trading is almost spoken of in a derisive way, as the colossal evil in gambling. Evil as it may be, it is the place where values are placed on the stocks and bonds of the great industrial enterprises of the country.

There is, whatever we may think about it, an invisible relation of some sort between bond trading and other sorts of trading, buying and selling.

When stocks and bonds climb conservatively, business in general catches the same spirit and there is a following, in a greater or less degree, on down the line in all kinds of trading.

It is true, too, that skyrocketing on Wall Street is a dangerous signal—known but lost sight of in the excitement.

The crash six years ago, following insane trading, burned out the brakes and the whole works went to the bottom of the grade.

That debacle will last and serve as a check till a new crop of traders grows up, and then, if it be true that history repeats itself, there will be another for another generation to extricate itself from.

President Roosevelt went aboard ship Sunday night for his cruise that will carry him through the Panama Canal and thence around three thousand miles to Honolulu. While he was fishing on the Fourth among the Bahama Islands, Mrs. Roosevelt and her party were in and around Asheville enjoying North Carolina's fine mountain scenery and delightful climate.

If Germany is not red, it is turning in that direction. In the past week a number of prominent leaders—leaders that crossed the path of Hitler—have faced the firing squad. Reports say hundreds have been slaughtered. That is one way of disposing of and blotting out opposition. The reaction may not be immediate but the Dragon's teeth have, no doubt, been sowed.

Timely Farm Questions Answered at State College

Question: My pullets show an eye irritation with a whitish matter in them. They are all thin and some are dying. What is the cause and how can it be controlled.

Answer: Your description indicates a deficiency or lack of vitamin A in the ration. Check the ration, being sure that yellow corn meal is being fed. If the birds are confined put them on range and, if there is not sufficient succulent green feed, add five percent of alfalfa leaf meal to the ration. It would also be well to add one percent of fortified cod liver oil to the ration every second day until the trouble disappears. This should be done whether or not the ration contains cod liver oil.

Question: What crops should be planted now for a home garden in eastern Carolina?

Answer: Snap beans and field peas are two garden crops that should be planted between July 1 and 15. Cabbage seed for the fall crop should also be seeded in the out-door bed. The length of rows, amount to seed, and a succession of crops for future plantings are given in Extension Circular No. 198 which will be sent free upon request to the Agricultural Editor, State College, Raleigh.

Question: Will drenching control stomach worm in lambs?

Answer: Experiments show that drenching is absolutely necessary especially where the lambs have grazed on permanent pasture. This applies to all lambs now on hand and the drenching should be continued until the first of November. The most practical method of control, however, is to change pastures as often as possible and drench only when conditions show this to be necessary.

CEDARS OF LEBANON ARE PLANTED IN U. S.

Good Will Offering to People of United States.

Washington.—Sent by the American University of Beyruth, Syria, as a good will offering to the people of the United States, 13 living cedars of Lebanon from the Phoenician coast at the eastern end of the Mediterranean were recently unloaded in America. At the direction of the President they were planted in the grounds of Arlington National cemetery, overlooking the Potomac river.

In the Bible these majestic trees are called "the trees of Jehovah, which He hath planted." Their most famous appearance in history was when King Hiram of Tyre transported Lebanon cedars to Jerusalem for the building of Solomon's temple.

Famous Trees Never Numerous. Scholars differ as to how many cedars of Lebanon there were in antiquity, according to the National Geographic Society.

It is probable that at no time were the limestone ridges of the Lebanon completely clothed in these majestic trees. In ancient times the wood was already valued, not only for its great strength and resistance to rot, but also for its rarity.

Some decades ago, with the encouragement of Queen Victoria, the small remaining cluster of giant trees was enclosed by a stone wall. The trees had long been considered sacred to man, and Hadrian issued an imperial order that the groves should not be harmed. Later the Maronites, who have a small chapel amid this tiny forest, threatened excommunication for anyone who harmed the trees. But herds of goats have showed less respect than man, and by nibbling at the saplings have prevented new growth.

A count of tree rings, made on small branches, indicates that the Lebanon cedar has a slow growth and a long life. The cedars are not nearly so tall as sequoias, but they have thick trunks, as large as 47 feet in circumference. A notable feature is that the horizontal branches are so thickly carpeted with needles that the heavy, firm cones appear as though up-ended on a well-kept lawn.

On Republic's Flag. The site of the chief cedar grove is one of rare beauty, the stage of a massive amphitheater miles across and 4,000 feet high. Immediately behind them the long line of the Lebanon rises to its culminating ridge, more than 10,000 feet above the Mediterranean. Twenty miles to the northwest lies the port of Tripoli.

The famous cedars are in the Lebanese republic, at the eastern end of the Mediterranean, just north of the Holy Land. Although the Lebanon is included in the French mandate with Syria, it has its own government under a Syrian president. The flag of the republic is the flag of France with a green cedar of Lebanon in the center.

The cedar of Lebanon also appears on the seal of the American University of Beyruth, donor of the group of cedars to America, and lapel buttons bearing the university's insignia are worn by graduates throughout the Near East. The cedars have been studied by specialists of the university. Dr. George E. Post of the faculty, authority on Syrian botany, made the statement, "There is not and never has been a rotten Lebanon cedar. The wood is incorruptible. The imperishable cedar remains untouched by rot or insect." The wood, like that of the cypress and the sequoia, is close grained and aromatic.

Church Will Celebrate Its 250th Anniversary

Mashpee, Mass.—Mashpee's old Indian church celebrates its two hundred fiftieth birthday this year.

An elaborate program of commemorative exercises and religious feasts is planned.

The church, housing one of the oldest Indian congregations in the country, was built in 1684 near the edge of a forest on the outskirts of this ancient village of the Wampanoags. Remodeled in 1717 and rededicated in 1923, the structure, a Cape Code landmark, still is a meeting place for Indian worshippers in summer months.

For more than two centuries, Harvard college has had an important part in the life of the church as a result of an unusual bequest. In 1711 Harvard received a bequest from Rev. Daniel Williams of England, for the perpetuation of the Mashpee Indian church. The college was named executor under the will and since has acted in that capacity.

Census of Gum Taken

Hartford, Conn.—Editors of a high school paper conducted a search to find out how much gum could be found in a typical school. They found 13,629 wads pasted on desks, seats and other convenient places; an average of three on each drinking fountain, and in all, if melted, about four gallons.

Too Poor to Propose

IF DORIS WHITE had not fallen in to his arms, Bob Richards would never have given her another thought.

He was clumping up the last flight of dark, oilcloth covered stairs, when he heard a little gasp and then something soft and yielding was flung head first into his arms. He caught her as easily as he had caught the ball when he was fielder, and having set her on her feet gently asked in his big voice with the trace of huskiness in it, "Hurt any?"

"She breathed quickly, and answered. "I—I guess you saved my life!" There was just the suggestion of a laugh in that voice that went straight to Bob's heart.

"You see, I must have caught my toe in the oilcloth," she explained.

Bob thought she had the softest, sweetest voice he had heard for a long time.

"I think my dinner is forever lost!" Doris said sadly, stooping to feel about the stairs.

They found at last the head of lettuce, the two rolls still in their bag and the lemon that was to help make up the dinner. In the process they said several things to each other, altogether trite and yet somehow most illuminating.

So it was not strange that the second time Bob ran into the occupant of the hall bedroom he lifted his hat and stopped to talk.

The third time they met, Bob asked directly, "Would you take a walk with me this afternoon?"

The faintest tinge of color showed through Doris' white skin and she said—"for it was Saturday—"I'd love to!"

They walked along Fifth avenue, stopping before the shop windows to peer in and feeling a part of all the thrill and stir of an afternoon on the avenue.

Doris' eyes were shining and she was actually prettier each time Bob Richards looked down at her.

The next Saturday it rained and Doris hesitated and then knocked at the door on the second floor that bore the card: "Robert Richards."

"I thought you might have tea with me, it's such a cold, dismal kind of afternoon," Doris offered shyly.

At the answering gleam of pleasure in his eyes Doris hurried up the flight of stairs. She knew it would mean that she must lunch meagerly all the following week, but she bought crumpets—toastied them over her gas burner—and a tiny jar of marmalade, and a spray of narcissus to put in the bowl by the window.

At his loud rap she opened her door and smiled up at him.

Bob laid down a box of candy as he said, "I bought it for the party," and looked about him curiously.

For it was the oddest hall bedroom he had ever seen. He had imagined a room with a bureau and an iron bed, and enough room just to sit on the one chair. What he saw was a room with two windows and an alcove, a room that looked sunny in spite of the fact that it was raining, because the walls were yellow and charming sunny colored chintz hung at the windows and covered the cushions of the two brown tinted wicker chairs.

Gleaming brass candlesticks were on a table in the corner, a brilliant color print of blue mountain and an icy mountain brook hung over the gray-painted table. A couch under a tumble of cushions—and a black luster bowl held the frail narcissus in the window.

Doris sitting down at the table pouring tea into clear yellow cups, he suddenly saw as another girl. A girl removed from his own hard struggles by all the beauty of this charming room. Why, she must earn more in a week than he did to have a place like this!

For a month Doris scarcely saw the owner of the room on the second floor. When she did meet him by chance, he hurried past her with an abrupt "Good evening!"

But once when she climbed the two flights of stairs and saw that Bob's door was open and a strange girl was standing by the black marble mantelpiece, her heart seemed like a piece of lead. She could scarcely drag herself away.

"Oh, do you live on the floor above?" the strange girl asked eagerly. "I've seen your room and it is so pretty—"

Doris answered, wondering how she could go on talking when the bottom of her little world had dropped out.

"I bought the hangings on Sixth avenue at a sale, and the candlesticks in Allen street for $1.25; you can find some second-hand furniture and paint it yourself; oh, yes, I'll show you how." She smiled wistfully and went on up the stairs.

But the blood thrummed in her ears madly when she heard clumping steps behind her. Doris turned to see Bob Richards coming toward her with a bewildered, dawning happiness in his eyes.

"I heard what you said," he began, "I had to come back. I thought I'd go away and try to forget you—for I knew I couldn't ask a girl with all you had to marry a poor fellow like me. You mean it, Doris, you fixed up that room out of nothing?"

He caught her hands and looked down into her eyes.

"Don't you know I love you?"

"But—" she whispered.

"I was ashamed to ask a rich girl to marry me," he said as he took her to his arms.
