The Textile Workers' Strike

No Disorder Reported in Alamance—Mills Shut Down and Employees Retire in Orderly way. Saturday night was heralded as the time to close on the "strike" order. On Monday the order was presumed to go into effect, but the mills, some of them, were closed Monday on account of it being a holiday and Labor Day. Last week a petition was circulated among mill operatives here requesting the opening of the mills this week for work as usual. It is learned from mill workers that 90 percent of the employees here signed the petition, and accordingly the mills resumed operations this week as usual. In other words there was no "strike" at the local mills, and only about one in ten favored closing in compliance with the "strike" order. In fact, so far as can be learned, there was no grievance to warrant a strike. It was not until last night that any textile mills in Alamance were shutdown. Several mills in Burlington were shutdown, as also were the mills here. A group called a "flying squadron" visited the plants and demanded operations to cease. From here and Burlington strike, roomers went out to the mills on Haw River to close the mills and it is feared that every textile mill in the county is shut. The only acts of violence in any way heard of were the breaking down the gates of the enclosure at Burlington: Mills Inc. and the cordite entry of a lumber plant at Burlington. Today, about noon, Mr. Lynn B. Williamson, manager of the Oneda Mills here, addressed the employees. He told them the mill would start tomorrow morning; that those desiring to work could go to work, and that they would be protected. Whatever may be the outcome of the opening, it is hoped that everything will be orderly and that no one will suffer any harm. The writer is not prepared to say what will be done at other mills or what more is contemplated.
