Save Your Baby Bonds

World War veterans will have plenty of advice about what to do with their Baby Bonds.

A majority of them will be cashed at once and the money all spent inside of a year with little or nothing to show for it.

If the bonds are kept, the money will not be spent. Money is about the easiest thing in the world to get rid of—it flows out when kept about the person.

Some will advise cashing and investing in something that pays better. That can be done—will be done in many cases, but will it be as safe?

There is no safer security than a government bond.

If the bonds are "salted down" they are safe. They grow in value every day. Wise financiers and investors put their savings in government bonds. You can do the same. If not urgently needed for immediate use, then save.

The interest on the issue of Baby Bonds would afford a modest annual income, enough to live on, for 100 thousand families and still leave the original face value of the bond.

Save your bonds if you can. Don't spend them until it is absolutely necessary. You have a good investment.

Dr. McDonald is already in his campaign and arranging speaking dates. Mr. Hoey has not yet announced any speaking dates.

Congress is hoping to get through with the business in the hopper and adjourn not later than Saturday. The tax bill is about the only obstacle in the way, and differences on that score are tentatively composed.

Senator D. U. Fletcher, 77, of Florida died suddenly at his apartment in Washington Wednesday morning. He had been U. S. Senator for 27 years. He was chairman of the committee on banking and currency. On May 8th, his colleague, Senator Park Trammell of Florida, died, both Senators passing in less than two months.

Alamance County had a large delegation present at the State Democratic Convention in Raleigh last Friday. A platform was adopted and there was much speaking. The platform recommends the removal of the sales-tax from necessities. Mr. Hoey and Dr. McDonald, the gubernatorial candidates in the second primary, accept the platform as satisfactory.

Last Monday was a big payday—Uncle Sam's biggest, for on that day he sent out 28 million, 94 thousand 895 separate bonds. These went in 2 million, 670 thousand 514 envelopes containing an average of $550 each. These went to the veterans of the world war as adjusted compensation. That is not all—there will be pensions to pay. Perhaps no one now living will be living when the last of the cost of a war, not our own, is paid, provided the government of the United States endures.

The National Democratic convention will meet in Philadelphia next week.

The National Republican convention in Cleveland unanimously nominated Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas for president and Col. Frank Knox of Chicago for vice-president last Thursday night and Friday.

In a five-year period, according to reports coming out from Washington, the population of the United States increased nearly five million. Some States, ten of them, are listed as having lost population in the period. Conservative North Carolina with a larger percent of native population than any other state of the Union, was not one of the losers, but is credited with a gain of 246,724. North Carolina now stands 12th in point of population, now placed at 3,417,000.

Geo. Ross Pugh Expresses Appreciation.

To my friends in North Carolina: I wish to express to each of you my grateful appreciation of your support of my candidacy for State Auditor, and as your next State Auditor, you will always find the door wide open to you and I shall always appreciate you asking me to serve you. You fought a splendid battle, and you have won a glorious victory.

Your friend,
Geo. Ross Pugh.

Chinese, Egyptians and Persians Loved Flowers

China shows the earliest record of the use of plants and flowers for decoration. Flowers and religion are closely united in all their early history, so the Chinese used to offer flowers as presents to their gods and to the departed relatives they worshiped as part of their religion. The way these facts are determined is by the paintings on old tapestries, vases, and potteries which symbolized the actions of the people. The predominating flower in the early history was undoubtedly the peony, as it is found depicted on nearly all the works of art.

In Egypt also, the history of flowers was closely bound to that of religion, for here, too, the people placed flowers on the altars and made certain flowers sacred to certain deities. The part that plants played is learned more easily than from Chinese history because the Egyptians clearly depicted their thoughts. Although the use of plants in Persia was largely influenced by the Chinese and Egyptians, the Persians still maintained a distinct character. The hanging gardens of Babylon may have constituted the most famous piece of landscape work of ancient times; this so-called wonder of the world was accomplished by terracing a steep hillside; the ultimate effect was that of many gardens hanging on the hillside. As Persia is a hot, sandy country, their decorative plantings had three main features in landscape design: water, trees, and grass. With them, flowers and color were relatively unimportant.

Buckwheat Traced 2,000 Years

Buckwheat cakes, good old stand-by of the breakfast and luncheon table generally regarded to be as 100 per cent American and native as anything could be, are, it turns out, actually an ancient Tibetan dish. Researches in connection with the early history, origin and distribution of the world's cultivated and useful plants, trace buckwheat back to Asia and indicate that it was there cultivated for at least 2,000 years. The Tibetans and other mountain tribes related to them, living in the Himalaya region, were the original buckwheat cultivators and the first buckwheat cake eaters. They produced a complete buckwheat culture complex, grinding the buckwheat into flour and making the flour into cakes, gruel and beer. They even utilized the straw of the plant as fodder in the winter. Among some of these hill tribes buckwheat still forms the principal crop and the staff of life.

Hoey Slogan--- "Let's Finish the Job"

Raleigh, June 15.—"Let's finish the job." This is the slogan of Hoey-for-Governor workers all over the State these days, said Hubert E. Olive, manager of Clyde Hoey's campaign for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

"Working in harness with the men and women who did such splendid work for Sandy Graham, we are going ahead at full speed," the manager continued.

"Mr. Hoey and myself have been delighted with the response of the Graham forces, 90 percent of which are continuing their fight against McDonaldism. Instead of having a let down following the first primary, we picked up speed, due to the help of the Graham workers."

Members of Hoey headquarters staff here said they were glad that McDonald called for a second primary. It is their contention that a second primary was necessary to "finish the job" begun by Hoey, Graham and McRae camps during the first primary. They even tell a story that Marshal Foch, head of the allied forces during the World War, when Germany signed the armistice because he believed that it would be to the benefit of the entire world to go on to Berlin and "finish the job." It was lucky for North Carolina, these Hoey workers contend, that McDonald did call for a second primary in that it made it possible for the Hoey-Graham-McRae allies to go "on to Berlin."

"But don't think we are going to be the victims of over confidence," Mr. Olive added. "We know that there is still a lot of work to be done and we are doing it. Every county manager, every worker in our organization, knows that this job will not be completed until the sun sets July 4."

Vitamins Always There; Ever Played Their Part

The idea that vitamins exist alone in the various foods and that a sufficient variety must be fed if all are to be included in the ration is one that is likely to be obtained from the literature discussing them. The emphasis placed upon a certain food's content of some particular vitamin may lead to the conclusion that no other vitamin can be found in that food. As a matter of fact, declares a correspondent in the Rural New-Yorker, the known vitamins are widely distributed in practically all foods, any one of these containing several. Certain foods, however, are richer in a designated vitamin than others and, if that vitamin is particularly wanted, the food containing it is given preference over other foods holding less.

As with all discoveries, that of the role played by vitamins in nutrition has led to an emphasis upon their value that has obscured other things of equal importance. One cannot live upon vitamins alone, and no one or several vitamins can accomplish all things in nutrition. Food is still food, and the fact that certain nutritive principles contained in it have been discovered does not alter the fact that these principles were there before their discovery and that they played their necessary parts as well before they become known as now.

Mammoth Cave Discovered by a Hunter in Year 1809

Mammoth Cave, the largest known cavern in the world, was discovered in 1809 by a hunter named Hutchins, relates a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The cave is situated in Edmonson county, Kentucky, near Green river, about 125 miles southwest of Lexington. There are several streams in the cave, the principal one being Echo river, which is nearly three-quarters of a mile long and communicates with Green river. The Styx, about 450 feet long, is crossed by a remarkable natural bridge.

There are avenues which extend for miles, and great chambers spacious enough to hold skyscraper office buildings. All of the halls offer to view a great variety of crystals and incrustations, stalagmites and stalactites, and with the cataracts and fountains form a most picturesque scenery.

Astronomy Table Used by Columbus Is Found

Seville, Spain.—Prof. E. Zinner of the Bamberg (Germany) observatory, announced discovery of the astronomical tables used by Christopher Columbus in his voyage which led to the discovery of America in 1492. The tables, he said, were those of Johann Muller, a scientist from Koenigsberg, and were entitled "Regiomontanus." The edition which Columbus used was published in 1481 and contained various marginal notes in the explorer's own handwriting, Zinner said.

Too Poor to Propose

IF DORIS WHITE had not fallen in to his arms, Bob Richards would never have given her another thought. He was clumping up the last flight of dark, oilcloth covered stairs, when he heard a little gasp and then something soft and yielding was flung head first into his arms. He caught her as easily as he had caught the ball when he was felder, and having set her on her feet gently asked in his big voice with the trace of huskiness in it, "Hurt any?"

"I-I guess you saved my life!" There was just the suggestion of a laugh in that voice that went straight to Bob's heart. "You see, I must have caught my toe in the oilcloth," she explained. Bob thought she had the softest, sweetest voice he had heard for a long time.

"I think my dinner is forever lost!" Doris said sadly, stooping to feel about the stairs. They found at last the head of lettuce, the two rolls still in their bag and the lemon that was to help make up the dinner. In the process they said several things to each other, altogether trite and yet somehow most illuminating.

So it was not strange that the second time Bob ran into the occupant of the hall bedroom he lifted his hat and stopped to talk. The third time they met, Bob asked directly, "Would you take a walk with me this afternoon?"

The faintest tinge of color showed through Doris' white skin and she said—for it was Saturday—"I'd love to!" They walked along Fifth avenue, stopping before the shop windows to peer in and feeling a part of all the thrill and stir of an afternoon on the avenue.

Doris' eyes were shining and she was actually prettier each time Bob Richards looked down at her. The next Saturday it rained and Doris hesitated and then knocked at the door on the second floor that bore the card: "Robert Richards."

"I thought you might have tea with me, it's such a cold, dismal kind of afternoon," Doris offered shyly. At the answering gleam of pleasure in his eyes Doris hurried up the flight of stairs. She knew it would mean that she must lunch meagerly all the following week, but she bought crumpets—toasted them over her gas burner—and a tiny jar of marmalade, and a spray of narcissus to put in the bowl by the window.

At his loud rap she opened her door and smiled up at him. Bob laid down a box of candy as he said, "I bought it for the party," and looked about him curiously.

For it was the oddest hall bedroom he had ever seen. He had imagined a room with a bureau and an iron bed, and enough room just to sit on the one chair. What he saw was a room with two windows and an alcove, a room that looked sunny in spite of the fact that it was raining, because the walls were yellow and charming sunny colored chintz hung at the windows and covered the cushions of the two brown tinted wicker chairs.

Gleaming brass candlesticks were on a table in the corner, a brilliant color print of blue mountain and an icy mountain brook hung over the gray-painted table. A couch under a tangle of cushions—and a black luster bowl held the frail narcissus in the window.

Doris sitting down at the table pouring tea into clear yellow cups, he suddenly saw as another girl. A girl removed from his own hard struggles by all the beauty of this charming room. Why, she must earn more in a week than he did to have a place like this!

For a month Doris scarcely saw the owner of the room on the second floor. When she did meet him by chance, he hurried past her with an abrupt "Good evening!"

But once when she climbed the two flights of stairs and saw that Bob's door was open and a strange girl was standing by the black marble mantel-piece, her heart seemed like a piece of lead. She could scarcely drag herself away.

"Oh, do you live on the floor above?" the strange girl asked eagerly. "I've seen your room and it is so pretty—" Doris answered, wondering how she could go on talking when the bottom of her little world had dropped out.
