How to Pay for New Conflict Is Europe's Biggest Problem; British Taxes Set New Record

THE WAR: Finance

Great Britain entered the World war in 1914 with a 849,000,000-pound debt, raised her tax rate to six shillings in the pound (or 30 per cent) and probably spent 11,076,000,000 pounds (about $55,000,000,000) to lick the Kaiser. In 1939 Britain's record peacetime budget was 1,322,444,000 pounds, of which 380,000,000 pounds was to be borrowed. Most of this was for defense, but what bothered Britishers most on September 1, when they declared war on Adolf Hitler, was their current public debt of 8,200,000,000 pounds, 13 times greater than 1914's.

To Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exchequer, fell the financing job. Up to the house of commons Sir John carried his first war budget, neatly packaged in the ancient case (see photo) which exchequers have used for years. Preliminarily, commons knew the war of 1939 would cost more than the last conflict, would possibly last longer, and would positively bleed the British taxpayer to death. Sir John therefore surprised no one with his budget:

To raise 70,000,000 extra pounds this year, and 146,000,000 extra the next fiscal year, Sir John assessed incomes at seven shillings in the pound, or 35 per cent, until next March 31; for the full 1940-41 fiscal year the rate is seven shillings sixpence, or 37 per cent. American taxpayers should have enjoyed the comparison:

Income of $2,000 per year:	American	British
Family with two children	None	$ 20.00
Married couple, no children	None	36.25
Bachelor	None	50.40
Income of $4,000 a year:
Family with two children	25	251.25
Married couple, no children	50	371.25
Bachelor	75	491.25
Income of $8,000 a year:
Family with two children	1,164	2,047.25
Married couple, no children	1,820	2,322.00
Bachelor	2,476	2,596.75

Meanwhile fraside economists debated how Adolf Hitler was faring in wartime. Disregarding his pre-war debt and his funny financing, it was a good guess that even should these obstacles be overcome the allies' blockade would strangle him. One-fourth his 1938 imports of $2,000,000,000 would be cut off, including 90 per cent of his high-test gasoline; 67 per cent of his grain and all his cotton, rubber, wool and tin. Even Russia's new friendship could not be expected to offset this loss, for the press of war will keep German factories busy, thus barring exchange of manufactured items for Soviet raw products. And Josef Stalin is not altruistic.

Eastern Front

After a 20-day siege, during which it was "bombed and burned into an unspeakable inferno," during which thousands of civilians died from bombs, bullets, pestilence or horsemeat diet, Warsaw surrendered and the war in Poland was over.

Western Front

After a month of see-saw fighting during which French-British troops apparently had the upper hand (thanks to Germany's pre-occupation with Poland) the battle of Siegfried vs. Maginot apparently got under way. French pressure was heaviest near Zweibrucken in the Saar region, and at least one report said that heavy French cannonading smashed a hole in the main Siegfried line between Metz and Saarbruecken. Certain it was that heavy artillery assumed new importance, for the French war office admitted enemy shells were falling in small towns behind the Maginot line. For the moment, Premier Edouard Daladier could tell his council of ministers that the situation was "most satisfactory."

At Sea

One bright autumn day North sea villagers in both Norway and Denmark heard cannonading at sea, occasionally spotting aircraft over the horizon. The booming stopped at night but started with new fury next day. Both Britain and Berlin at first denied a battle, then each admitted it and claimed victory. The press could choose between the British report that one British airplane carrier had been destroyed and a battleship badly damaged, or the report of London's first lord of the admiralty, Winston Churchill, that a German attack had been repulsed with no losses.

Day before, popular Mr. Churchill told the house of commons that "a third" of Germany's submarines had been destroyed and that shipping losses were about a third what they were in disastrous April, 1917. Moreover, losses were still going down (see chart). What he did not point out is that Britain has fewer boats at sea now than on September 1.

DOMESTIC: Repercussions

Dramatic volumes might have been written last month about how Europe's war whipped the slow stream of U. S. life into a raging river filled with whirlpools, quicksand beds and bottomless pits. At Los Angeles Mrs. Josephine Mair filed a notarized document forbidding her two sons from "participating in any activity called war." The U. S. fleet began secret battle games in the Pacific, a vast naval training program was planned at Hawaii's Pearl harbor, and President Roosevelt urged a cessation of foreign purchases of war materials that the U. S. might create its own reserves.

While Texas' Rep. Martin Dies waved the flag for forecast all Communists and Fascists in government jobs would soon be ousted, while the American Legion in convention cut its foreign tie with the Federal Interallies des Ancien combattants, while two-thirds of the people (in a Gallup poll) said they don't believe German news reports, congress wrestled with neutrality and appeared to be making progress on a proposal to lift the arms embargo and substitute cash-and-carry.

Franklin Roosevelt's administration was winning, thanks to smart handling of the issue by Sen. Key Pittman and colleagues. To placate anti-repealists and anti-New Dealers, congress was given power which the President alone enjoys under the present act, to decide when a foreign war exists. In every other provision there was similar rigidity, so that isolationists were left with little to fight except the fast-fading issue of embargo vs. cash-and-carry. Having started the ball rolling, the White House left neutrality severely alone. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, asked for his opinions, answered Sen. Arthur Vandenberg that he had "complete confidence" in the legislative branch and that he had no "particular comment" to make.

Next day the senate foreign relations committee okayed cash-and-carry, sending it to the floor for "hell-to-breakfast" debate.

Only strengthening this suspicion was the official German news agency's report that Russia has agreed to co-operate in an attempt to bring peace between the Reich and the allies. Obviously Herr Hitler was frantically sparing no effort to end the war. The previous weekend had brought a peace feeler from Benito Mussolini, but the result had been negative. Therefore Germany had coaxed and begged Russia into the peace effort, even though the price for this co-operation was a loss to German prestige in eastern Europe.

RUSSIA:

Dance Master

Down from the western skies at Moscow dropped a passenger plane bearing German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop. Significantly, perhaps, he gave no Nazi salute nor did his hosts offer a Communist clenched fist. Otherwise the setting was familiar, for when von Ribbentrop reached the Kremlin he found it overrun with Balkan and Baltic statesmen of the type Adolf Hitler used to summon from Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland. This must have worried von Ribbentrop; Russia, having split Poland's loot with Herr Hitler, was emerging as a dominant eastern European power that must be watched.

Great Britain and France were confident that if left alone, Russia would give Germany more trouble than co-operation despite their kias over Poland's prostrate form. First there was talk in Moscow diplomatic circles of a "sphere of influence" division in which Russia would control the Baltic, and Germany the Balkans. But later it looked like Russia was taking everything:

Estonia's nervous Foreign Minister Karl Selter scurried to Moscow with explanations of why an interned Polish submarine had been allowed to escape, later sinking a Russian freighter. His explanation was "unacceptable" and soon Soviet troops, warships and planes encircled Estonia. Under this pressure, and while Moscow radio attacked the Estonian government, the little nation soon found it wise to sign a "mutual assistance" pact which grants Russia the right to maintain naval and military bases on islands off the Estonian west coast.

Turkey's Foreign Minister Sukru Saracoglu was there, too, and soon there were sound reports of a Rumanian-Bulgarian-Turkish "Black sea bloc" which would smash Adolf Hitler's hope of Balkan expansion. Rumania, between two fires, was leaning Moscow-wise and away from Berlin. Bulgaria's special envoy to the Kremlin established a Moscow-Sofia airline to be followed by a trade pact.

The only fly in this ointment was Herr von Ribbentrop and the 35 "experts" who came with him from Berlin. While Dictator Josef Stalin stayed in the background like any well-behaved master mind should, Premier Viacheslav M. Molotov called the tune that made big Germany dance as violently as the little Balkan and Baltic states.

People of Farms and Small Towns Will Lead Way to Sane Thinking

Less Affected by Selfishness and Mass Emotion Than City Folks; President Puts Republicans on Spot; Embargo Faces Long Debate in Senate.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART
WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—The late Lord Balfour, one of the really far-seeing British statesmen of two decades ago, once uttered an observation to present conditions. During the early days of 1917 before American force had begun to weigh heavily in the balance of world hostilities, Lord Balfour said to a group of American newspaper editors and publishers:

"The central powers will be defeated in this war, but the test will come after peace has been enforced by arms. The test will be whether the peace we have thus gained will be worth having—whether we can preserve liberty and democracy. I believe we will be able to sustain that peace and preserve that freedom; and I believe, moreover, that it will be the people of rural America—of the farms and the small towns—that will lead the world back to sane thinking."

With the congress giving consideration to President Roosevelt's urgent request for repeal of the arms embargo as a means of preserving our neutrality in the present European conflict, but with propaganda stirring up emotions on all sides, there seems to be a need for that "sane thinking" that Lord Balfour mentioned. And, as I said above, it is made to appear that the people of the farms and the small towns are going to have to lead the way again; they have that responsibility because they obviously will be less affected by selfishness, racial interest, foreign influence and mass emotion that upsets thought on issues of this kind.

Having made such a sweeping statement concerning these responsibilities, I will attempt to show what the facts are, what has been going on in Washington and elsewhere, that has a bearing on the point.

Embargo Debate May Clarify Issues in Public Mind

President Roosevelt's appeal for repeal of the arms embargo was predicated upon his conviction that such action will help us to stay out of the conflict. He argued that there was no reason for the sale of cotton and an embargo on a processed product like gun cotton; that it was silly to permit the sale of aluminum and forbid the sale of airplanes made from aluminum, and so on. It would be more nearly true neutrality, he asserted, if we said to any and all belligerents that they could come here and buy anything they want—provided only that they pay cash on the barrelhead and haul their purchases away in their own ships.

But while the President was making a good case for his position, he also waded into rather muddy ground by calling attention to the fact that much additional employment will be created here by war purchases of unlimited variety. His thread of thought, therefore, can hardly be described as a plan to take the profit out of war. It may be secondary to the great human desire for peace, but the profit phase surely was evident.

Be that as it may, the senate is determined to debate the proposal at great length. It faces a long drawn-out struggle, and the value of that will be, as many senators have stated, to clarify the issues in the public mind. That is to say, there will be a crystallization of sentiment brought about by the debate.

Mr. Roosevelt called in congressional leaders; both Democratic and Republican, for a White House discussion of the plan. He explained publicly and to the members of the conference that party politics should be adjourned—that this was no time for politics.

Reaction to Conference Is Favorable to President

The general reaction to the conference with congressional leaders appears to have been very favorable to the President. The public thought on inclusion of former Governor Landon of Kansas and Col. Frank Knox of Illinois, Republican nominees for the presidency and vice presidency in 1936, however, was quite different. Mr. Roosevelt advertised the invitation to these gentlemen to the conference as evidence of his desire to adjourn politics. That ballyhoo did not take hold very well. Many observers wondered how the President figured that Messrs. Landon and Knox could have anything to say about national policy which is the exclusive responsibility of congress. They were defeated, discredited as leaders, by the voters in 1936. Thus, critics suggested that Mr. Roosevelt—with politics adjoined—had played an exceedingly smart brand of politics and Messrs. Landon and Knox swallowed the bait in the fashion of amateurs. The President has put the whole Republican party on the spot, with the assistance of its members, and there are signs that a Republican effort will be made to offset the move.

Now, there is another thing cropping up. Beneath shouts of patriotism and declarations that we must avoid getting into the raging madness overseas, there is a feeling that congress ought to remain on the job straight through the winter. The determination of the President and his spokesmen in congress is to limit action in the extra session to the subject of repeal of the arms embargo. If that is all the actual work that is accomplished, it would require only a short time. On the other hand, there seems to be a feeling that Mr. Roosevelt should not be left with all of the responsibility of a war threat hanging over head. Since the entire membership has been called back here, the observation has been frequent that they ought to stay on until the regular session begins in January to be of help to the President as lightning-like changes take place in the situation abroad.

One hears a great deal of discussion among senators and representatives about our nation's financial and economic condition. They suddenly have realized the fact that there exists a national debt of more than $45,000,000,000—almost $20,000,000,000 more than the total of the debt when the World war ended. It is not a pleasant thought, but it must be faced.

Turn to Rural America to Lead Way to Sane Thinking

And as to the government itself, attention lately has been called to the fact that there are now 927,887 persons on the government payroll. Contrast that with 917,700, which was the greatest number employed by the government at any time during the World war. The military and naval forces are not included in the figures given. These facts were mentioned to me at the Capitol the other day because some members were looking to conditions after another war. It was explained that there was very little contraction of the government's size after the World war and that was more than offset by expansions in the last six years. In other words, a war will place an additional drain upon the government, which is the people, that will become a permanent thing.

Thus we see that minor matters, as well as major questions, are having an effect upon the thinking of the country. While they are not so intended, all of the many governmental changes and plans and conditions turn conversations to the subject of war.

So, we come back to the original statement. From a long period of observation of people, it seems to me that those folks who form the backbone of America are likely to be less influenced by the various things I have mentioned than is the case with the folks in the cities. The part of rural America which will provide the balance of power in a decision to stay out of war, or go in, will be able to think clearly.

Imm and Insane Ideologies Have Their Origin in Cities

To refer again to Lord Balfour's statement, it can be said that he foresaw exactly what has happened in the United States. It is necessary only to recall that all of the insane and insane ideologies through which we have passed since the World war have had their origin in cities. "Movements" for this and that and the other program or plan came from hotbeds in thickly populated areas. It is to be admitted that they gained much more headway than any one thought possible. They are again on the way out, however, because such things have no appeal for the type of citizens to which Lord Balfour referred.

Louis Stymied By Dearth of Title Threats

By ROBERT McSHANE

HEAVYWEIGHT Champion Joe Louis has no more worlds to conquer. When he knocked out Bob Pastor in a recent Detroit brawl, he eliminated the last in a field of weak contenders. Pastor was given little chance against the Brown Bomber, but in view of their previous fight the match was logical.

Louis' co-managers, John Korborough and Julian Black, said they had no plans for the immediate future and the Pastor bout was the last the title holder would fight this year. Louis, they said, will fight Tony Galento next year if the public wants the fight.

And even if the fans fail to become very enthusiastic about the match it probably will be shoved down their throats. Galento is the only fighter left for Louis to meet. By the process of elimination the champ has arrived at his present position—top man in a field of second-rate pug.

That is no reflection on Louis. He's willing, even anxious, to meet all contenders worthy of a crack at the crown. The fact that most of his fights have been too easy is his own misfortune. They're too forced—high powered publicity has put them over. None of them have been "naturals." The outcome was pretty well established long before the sound of the opening gong.

Grist for the Mill

Louis won the championship in 1937 from Jimmy Braddock, even then a has been. Courageous and smart, but still a has been. His next fight was with Tommy Farr, who crossed up the dopesters by staying the 15 round route. Nathan Mann and Harry Thomas followed in quick succession. Shirley Temple might better have been matched with King Kong. Max Schmeling, seeking to repeat his stunning upset of 1936, wherein he knocked Louis out in the twelfth round, was next on the list. The champ put the finishing touches on his in the first round of their return bout.

John Henry Lewis failed to last one round. Partially blind, he was not a fit match for Joe. Then came Jack Roper, an aged gentleman who practically tottered into the ring, only to be knocked out in the first. Tony Galento, Louis' next opponent, managed to last four rounds.

Pastor, by dint of courage and determination, stayed with the king for 11 rounds. The outcome was never in doubt, however, from the beginning of the fight.

All of which adds up to the fact that Galento is the only possible opponent for the past championship belt. The building will have to be immense. Able to last only four rounds in the first fight, Galento managed to reach Louis only once. On the strength of his character, Tony is clamoring for a return bout.

Nova Myth Exploded

True, it might as well be Galento as any other contender. He surprised experts and fight fans alike by knocking out Lou Nova, who was looked upon as the most promising of the hopefuls—another Tunney. The rotund beer dispenser exploded that myth and, at least in his own mind, earned another chance at the title.

That's the sad part of the situation today. One contender is not much different than any other. They're all fodder for the Louis mill, and none of them show promise of being able to give the champ a good fight, much less win the crown.

There have been rumors of Louis' retirement for some time. Most of them have little basis. It is entirely possible, however, that he will quit the ring sooner than might be anticipated ordinarily.

Sport Shorts

WHEN Joe Louis was 15 years old he was shipped away from school with the teacher's report: "Shows no great mental aptitude . . . but might do something with his hands . . ."

Charley Dresden, Brooklyn coach, believes if Whitlow Wyatt hadn't been injured, the Dodgers would have given the Reds and Cards a great race for the pennant . . . Bill Nicholson, Cubs' outfielder, was refused admittance to the naval academy because he is slightly color blind . . . Babe Ruvalcaba, sophomore fullback at Wisconsin, plans to make music his life work . . . Walter Briggs, owner of the Detroit Tigers, calls Jimmy Dykes, White Sox manager, the greatest drawing card in the American league. He says that Dykes, instead of getting fined, should be handed a bonus for his brilliant tactics . . . Germany's sports fueder has issued an appeal to all sporting organizations in Germany to send sport newspapers to their members on the front.

When Is a Knockout?
If a boxer fails to answer the bell in which round was he knocked out? That highly technical problem was answered recently by the National Boxing association, members of which turned it over to a special committee. They decided this way: If a boxer fails to answer the bell for the new round, then the referee must rule he was K. O'd in the new round, but the bell must be rung. Which means that if the fighter finishes, for instance, the fourth round, but is unable to enter the ring for the fifth, the referee notes the ringing of the bell and declares the knockout came in the fifth. The committee raised two questions. First, suppose the fighter leaves his corner and goes to the dressing room before the bell for the next round? Second, suppose a fighter is cut and a physician advises him not to proceed further with the match? The N. B. A. decided the rule holds good in both these situations.

Gridiron Topnotchers
This continues a series of articles featuring outstanding football players from schools throughout the nation. Watch their records during the coming season.

The thrower of the longest forward pass in the history of football about which there can be no argument is Kenny Washington, U. C. L. A. Negro halfback, who hopes to lead the Bruins to the greatest season in their history. The historic play occurred in 1937 when the Bruins were playing Southern California. In a tight spot, Washington faded back to his own 13 yard line. Shaking off would-be tacklers he suddenly let fly a heave that seemed as if it would take his arm with it. One nationally known sports writer estimated the pass traveled 75 yards. Others said 83. However, newsreels showed the throw actually to be 63 yards. At any rate, U. C. L. A. fans know it's the longest it's possible to prove, and argue that pictures might not show Brick Muller's historic Ross Bowl pass.

Washington is an exceptional line backer, but is used there only rarely because of his offensive ability and the fact that line backing would put too much of a load on him. His ball carrying, passing and signal-calling smartness have made him one of the greatest football players of the West coast.

He has a peculiar shuffling walk and a weaving gait on the run that makes him exceedingly difficult to get hands on. He had both knees broken in a bicycle accident as a child, and is knockkneed, which accounts for his ability to break quickly to either side.

Twenty-three years old, Kenny is 6 feet, 1 inch tall and weighs 185 pounds. Last year he played 400 out of 720 minutes. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
