How the Farmer May Stretch His Wartime Dollar!

by Ben F. Alvord
Head, Dept. of Agricultural Economics
Alabama Polytechnic Institute

FARMERS as a group are frequently assumed to be able to make each dollar go farthest and buy most. This reputation may perhaps not be deserved. They have had of necessity, however, much practice in stretching dollars. Their families are larger and their cash incomes invariably average smaller than those of the average family of the United States. Now is the time for all farmers who really want to continue to be good dollar stretchers to give careful thought to how they handle their affairs.

The farmer must get his dollar before he stretches it. It takes long, hard hours of work on the part of the farmer and his family to produce crops now for hired labor is scarce and often impossible to get. However, prices of products farmers sell in this country are about twice as high as they were in 1940 and prices farmers pay for fertilizer, machinery, and other production factors average only about fifty per cent higher than in that year.

Thus, farmers tend to have a greater margin over production costs than usual and on the average should have more dollars to stretch. Some factors in the present situation hinder dollars stretching and some help. Living costs, even for the most necessary articles and services, have mounted and taxes have climbed sharply. On the other hand, the farmer is forced to spend less for automobile driving and other travel; he is forced to produce and store certain foods that he customarily buys; and he is duty bound to economize in other ways for the war effort. This situation means he has some dollars at least to stretch. Stretching requires that he pay some attention to the value of the dollar. He can stretch his dollar by paying debts. His dollar purchases less of many things now than in 1940, but it purchases just as much release from debt as ever. Thus, it is a good time to pay off debts—especially the long-

NOTIONS ABOUT YOUR DOG THAT AREN'T SO

The country dog does not live longer than the city dog

A dog that bolts his food is not undernourished

You cannot tell a purebred dog by his black-roofed mouth

Three popular misconceptions about canines are here debunked by the Gaines Dog Research Center, New York City. The country dog does not live longer than the city dog. As a matter of fact, the exact reverse is true: The lifespan of the average city dog is two to three years longer than that of his country cousin. Chief reason for this is the better care city dogs receive, particularly in the matter of feeding. City dogs, of course, are not exposed to the natural hazards encountered by country dogs. A dog that bolts his food is not undernourished. It is natural for a dog to wolf or gulp his meals. The trait is believed a carry-over from primitive days when dogs ran in packs and each had to eat fast to get his share of captured food. Another fact: The structure of the dog's mouth and throat is unlike that of most domesticated animals. You cannot tell a purebred dog by his black-roofed mouth. The mouths of many cross-breeds are black as midnight. The black tongue is peculiar to the Chow Chow, and some authorities hold that a black or partially black tongue is an indication of Chow blood somewhere along the line even though a given animal may have no other hint of Chow resemblance or characteristics.
