A young clerical gentleman relates the following specdote of one of his Dutch brethren. The old tellow was about commencing one of his spiritual exercises, when to his being a little near sighted, was added the dim light of a country church. After clearing out his throat, he gave out the hynin, prefacing it with the apology

The light ish bad, mine eyes ish dim, I scarce can see to read dish hymn.

The clerk supposing it was the first stanza of the hymn, struck up to the tune of common me-

The old men, taken semewhat aback by this turn of affairs, corrected the mistake by saying I did't mean to sing dish hymn,
