Virginia and North Carolina—The Richmond Enquirer.

We had intended to continue our reply to the Richmond Enquirer, but the following from one of the ablest and most gifted of the Confederate States, saves us the labor of saying one word on the subject of our correspondence. It is filled with the most valuable and interesting information, and is a most valuable contribution to the cause of the South.

Read what our correspondent says of the paper to your satisfaction.

The Enquirer seems to think that we are disposed to answer some questions regarding the Richmond Enquirer. In this we are mistaken. We shall meet all its questions in our own way and time, and we are taking our readers from the rest that we have in store for them.

THE NORTH CAROLINA ANTI-SLAVER.
I am led to this humiliating inquiry by recent and current events in and out of the State. I freely concede that there ought to be no compromise or strife among the people of any State, or among the States themselves. And he who originates strife is to blame; for it is not in human nature to compromise without regret, and self-reproach, and ill will. It is charged, that those who govern North Carolina, have caused divisions among the people; and organized themselves into a party, and presented all others, and have inaugurated measures injurious to the common good, and had faith in these things are of a great crime. If they are not, it is a gross slander. And the character of those in power, and the character of the State policy, require that the truth should be known by all who will do so justly; and that those who are, against the truth, should be exposed.

Soon after Lincoln's election, the propriety of calling a Convention to decide, was by the Legislature then in session, submitted to a vote of the people. The people refused to call a Convention at all, and the vote for members at the same time, indicated that two thirds of the people were opposed to secession for any cause then existing. But, in a short time, events occurred which induced these same people to meet in Convention, and decide by a majority vote. Up to that time, the two divisions among the people were called "Unionists" and "Secessionists." And the names truly indicated the sentiments of each party. After it became necessary to secede, and the people were unanimous, the name "Unionists" no longer indicated the sentiments of any party of anybody; for all were then secessionists, but in the same sense, as the original secessionists were for secession without sufficient cause, and together with the secessionists, the North Carolina secessionists, which the Unionists were, for the same cause. This is the true state of the case, and the only one that can be maintained.

As proof of the first proposition I mention, that although, as shown by the vote before the Convention, and by the vote of the people against the original secessionists; yet, the Convention did not a single act of a party character, prescribed in its charter, and aspired to nobility. At the Presidential election, that same year, they made an opposition to the original secession President, but gave him a unanimous vote.

As proof of the second proposition, pass over to the Convention—their proposed ordinance sent every man to the gallows who questioned the manumission of their negroes; and the like, I mention, that although, although it was of necessity, greatly multiplied, and although the secessionists were two thirds in numbers, and some of them nearly as good as secessionists, yet, not one citizen was allowed to be killed by them. After the Presidential election, which was unanimously for Mr. Davis, they claimed that secession as a party triumph, simply because all did not unite upon the same names as electors, which was, of course, the merest matter of form. The organ of the party, the State Journal, said: "It is a strange and pleasing coincidence that the first number of our new volume should be the herald to our readers of a new victory by the triumph of the electoral ticket advised by this paper and its political confessors." And it said further of the Conservatives, that they should have "a hideous mark upon their brow, by which they should be known by the people."

Now, in what was the "victory?" Over whom was it? For what was the "hideous mark?" If the election was for a President, and all voted for the same President, where could be the victory of one party, or the infamy of the other? What could be complained of, except that the Destructives set up a ticket, avowedly as a party ticket, for which all did not vote, and thereby opposed, not the President, but the Confederacy, not the State, but an acknowledged organized party of "political confederates." Here, then, is full proof that the Destructives had organized a party, and marked every man who did not vote with them, in matters of form.
Verily, they are Destructives.

They are a party, and a party of "political confederates." Self-reproach is not a virtue, and it is not a duty, and it is not a crime, to say, what do these guilty men do? We are excluded from all rights in our own State, although we are the power to take them, and we are excluded from the rights of citizens. We are not Mr. Davis, but still a victory is claimed for us. We have pointed out our mistake and treasure for the State, but those who have done the little of either, say we are traitors, and have marked us in the brow with it in all time to come, and our children may be known and hated—What must be done? The toast sounded, Arouse! Arouse yourselves! rang from one end of the State to the other; and the people ran to the polls, and by such a vote as never was given before, drove these traitors from power, and put in better men.
But truth requires that it should be their
"aid, that not for this only were they driven out, but because it was found that they had neglected the best interests of the State, and were as imbecile before the enemy as they were malignant towards their friends.

But what a howl is raised by the Destructives from one end of the State to the other? What is it for? They have been turned out of office! Well, why did they allow it? Why did not the "political confederates" triumph in the election? Why not "another victory?" Why was not the "mark on the brow" plainer? Alas! Did they have, and have they lost the people's confidence? This is the question of the Conservatives! If they were making in supposing they had the victory and the people's confidence, what right have they to claim what they never had? If they had the victory and the confidence, by what blunder, or treason, have they lost them, and turned every body against them? One of two things is true, it was false to claim the public confidence, or it was a shame to forfeit it. And now you who so lately strutted conquerors; who called every pleasant place yours; who, by your prowess, have preserved every thing in your State which the enemy did not want, and manfully surrendered to him every thing which he desired; who had no friend that you did not hate and no enemy that you did not fear; cease to howl as a wounded lion, and return to your parlor as a man to his family, and try to catch the spirit of the times, and act like men, and some good may be accomplished in the future, and much error forgiven you in the past.

Not only has this injustice been done us by our opponents in the State, but evidently by the press of other States, to whom we are indebted for the attack.
They have "aid" us in our "sin."
And the press of the party in other States, to their own shame, and to the shame of North Carolina, have undertaken to do what the State Journal and especially the Richmond Enquirer, the organ of the Destructives, has done for us. They have said, "We are excluded from all rights in our own State, although we are the power to take them, and we are excluded from the rights of citizens." And they have said, "We are not Mr. Davis, but still a victory is claimed for us." And they have said, "We have pointed out our mistake and treasure for the State, but those who have done the little of either, say we are traitors, and have marked us in the brow with it in all time to come, and our children may be known and hated." And they have said,
"Arouse! Arouse yourselves! rang from
people ran to the polls, and by such a vote
traitors from power, and put in better men.
But truth requires that it should be their
their friends."

But the Enquirer does not confine structures to the Conservatives as a party, but presumptuously attacks the State itself, and denounces her Legislature as "very ungovernable," and as "acting in violation of her duty," and praises Virginia and holds her up as an example for North Carolina.

Now, all this in the "press of Virginia," is pardonable presumption and vanity, (scarcely) but that the press of North Carolina should join with the press of Virginia in the praise of Virginia and the denunciations of North Carolina, is insufferable.

I would not, unprovoked, remind Virginia of her misdeeds, or mortify her with her faults; but self-respect requires self-defence. What is there, then, in Virginia, that is better than North Carolina? A large portion of North Carolina, it is true, has been ravaged by the enemy; but a much larger portion of Virginia has played her part, "opened her feet and called on every passer-by to come in." She has pulled down her old prisons and built new ones to hold her own "suspected" and the unsuspected of North Carolina, who have been arrested without a cause, to keep Virginia in countenance.

Her press, the Enquirer itself, for hire, publishes daily for its own money, jobs the depreciation of the Confederate money, at its very capital, 30 per cent. below its own bank notes, which are themselves 300 per cent. below the specie standard. She is indignant that any body or any party should think of the spoils, or honors of office or place or should "reare a bit" for the disgrace of being denounced or excluded as unworthy of trust; yet demands and receives for her own citizens almost as many of these, as is yielded to the whole South besides. She puts her skeleton regiments, full officer, up on the public pay, and boasts of her disinterestedness. She claims Richmond as the vitals of the Confederacy, as if the South could not breathe without, when, truth to say, she can scarcely breathe with Castle Thunder, and could not think without the brains of the Enquirer, which is so stolid as to boast that its master, the President, does not "remember" almost the only thing he ever knew—the existence of party. She impudently rebukes North Carolina when whenever territory raked by the five tooth comb of Richmond deceives, not a traitor, or can be found, further want of devotion to the common cause, when Virginia herself has yielded almost as much strength to the South, as has North Carolina, and is Virginia superior to North Carolina? It is only in boasting except in vanity, vice and vermin.

Let the "press of Virginia" devote itself to the preservation of her own morals; and when it can present Virginia, not as a virgin undefiled, for that were impossible, but as a woman returned, and North Carolina should not be, as she is now, without a blemish, we will yield to our more virtuous sister the compliment of copying her reform. But, until then, let her not flaunt her tergiversity. Let her, like an imperious courtesan, affect at least enough of reserve to be sought after—lost to be said of her, as was said of Jerusalem:
"And the contrary is in thee from other women, in that thou givest a reward to thy lovers, and no reward is given unto thee." But what is the ground of this tirade against North Carolina? What has she done? What has she left undone? There she stands—draw nearer. The veil of her modesty need not be raised to discover that she has furnished as many troops as any State in the South, to fight for the South, and not one to fight against it.
The "press of Virginia" admits that she had provided for them better than any other State. They have fought as well.
More of her territory has been taken by the enemy than of any other State in the South. Less has been done in her defense than in defense of any other State.
There is not a fortification deserving the name in her whole land. Few troops have been allowed her, and they have been commanded by officers who would not be trusted with forces elsewhere. In almost every conflict with the enemy in her borders, there has been just enough of resistance to enable him to boast a victory, and to make her feel the degradation of defeat. What the enemy has left of her wealth has been ordered to be destroyed by her friends; and she has no voice or influence in the Cabinet. In such a crisis, if North Carolina were to call her soldiers from distant fields to defend her own, who could blame her? But she has done no such thing. She has only called for 10,000 of her citizens, who are not in the service, to volunteer in her defence. This is all.
This is her crime?

It is said that North Carolina do this to array herself in conflict with the Confederacy. Why, be it so. What is the Confederacy but her servant? And who claims for the Confederacy the right to question the property of the will of a sovereign State? Let it be that North Carolina may owe obligations to her sister sovereigns, but she owes no duty to her servant.
I grant that she is under obligations to maintain amity with her sisters in the same way. But does that go to the confederacy, she must yield her own independence to her sisters, and submit to the domination of the Confederacy?
If so, she is no longer a sovereign State.
It is said that North Carolina has no
